Scope Note

Cato Wesley Adams (1889-1988), born in Washington, DC was an educator, school principal and championship coach of baseball, basketball and track at Armstrong High School in Washington, DC. Mr. Adams was a veteran of World War I. Among his many assignments, he was Station Chief in charge of communications while attached to headquarters of the 184th Brigade. Later he was detailed as Brigade Interpreter charged with translating wireless dispatches picked up from the French and German stations by U.S. Army Signal Corp. Mr. Adams received the Distinguished Service Award for his wartime effort. Mr. Adams was also one of the organizers of the Alpha Omega chapter of Omega Psi Phi Fraternity, the Fairfax county chapter of the NAACP, and was an avid collector of over 2,000 pipes from around the world.

The Cato Wesley Adams Collection was partially acquired from Ella Edwards of Upper Marlboro, Maryland in 1986. The papers total one and one-half liner feet and span the years 1902-1990. The collection is comprised primarily of photographs, but also Mr. Adams' childhood, as a cadet at Armstrong High School, his graduating class in 1908, in middle age and as an older man. There are also photos of him as a Station Chief in France while attached to the headquarters of the 184th Brigade. Photographs of groups, friends, and associates can be found in this series, as well as photographs of classes of students and sports team at Armstrong High School from 1902-1943 and a photograph of the faculty of the Night school for 1949-1950. The printed materials consist of club and school programs in which Mr. Adams participated. Also included are newspaper clippings documenting his life as an educator in the segregated school system of Washington, DC and the influence he had on many of his students' lives. He once said, "I have never seen a boy too tough for me to handle."
