HOw ARD, I love Old Howard," the words rang out joyously. The girl singing dashed lightly through the rain, past the shrubbery, into the garage. The man, polishing the car there, smiled wistfully, his head bent down in thought. For a moment the girl watched him. What a strong, swift, lithe body he had! He felt her gaze and looked up.

"Ah good morning, Signorita Eva," he smiled, "You indeed have a gift of song."

"Good morning, Luigi; it is not I alone who have this gift. It belongs to my race."

"A splendid race," he said as he bent over his work. The girl looked from his gloved hands to his clear face and smiled. How queer it seemed that an Italian should have a pale face and gray eyes! And such eyes, eyes that sparkled and laughed and questioned and dared! She had expected them all to be swarthy and have the coal-black eyes.

"Signorita," he told her, "You know only the people of Sicily. I am of Rome." She looked at him thoughtfully. He arose, glanced at the car critically, drew off his gloves, and walked to the door. He stood there silently, his back toward her.

"Ah! My Country!" he breathed longingly, as if he saw it through the misty rain. He stood in deep thought, his long fingers beating a tattoo upon the panes of the door. Suddenly he wheeled about and, with a determined stride, stood before her.

"Signorita Eva, you will take with me a short ride?" His voice begged but his eyes commanded her. Their eyes met in a short beseeching, commanding, protesting, assenting moment. He smiled and opened the door of the car for her.

As the huge gray car rolled purringly down the driveway and crept slowly along the street, the girl thought of the many things that had happened since June. She had come home from Howard and found this new car. What a beauty it was! And on the front seat she had found her initials and a triangle containing H. U. Her "dad" was so thoughtful! He had known that would please her. Being too busy to drive himself, he had gotten a chauffeur who would teach her. And this new chauffeur was Luigi! What silently happy days she had spent in learning to drive. Then he had gradually ceased to be just a chauffeur and had become a man. How they had talked! He'had told her of Rome and the blue sky above it and the old Tiber, "Flavum Tiberim" she had flashed out. Then he had told her of the places where Horace and Virgil and Cicero had lived and walked. And swiftly had grown a feeling for him that thrilled and frightened her.

"Signorita," his voice broke in gently, "there is much that we must say to-day. Once you asked me about myself. Now I shall tell you."

With a quick movement he swung the car under a tree and shifted the gear to neutral. They were now in the country, and the long wet road was almost free of traffic. He turned and looked at (Continued on Page 2)

her. His eyes drew and read her.

The intimacy of the closed car stole upon her. She tried to drop her eyes. She could not.

"It is better to be honest," he said his voice gravely sweet. His fingers touched and rested upon hers. He was still, then spoke slowly.

My dear!” She plucked at his sleeve eagerly. “Must you go back, Luigi? Must you? Don’t! Stay with me! I want you so!"

The man looked at her lovingly. Duty called him and he wanted love.

“My sweet, I must go. You will go with me? My country calls. I must go. You will come, sweet girl?”

He held out his arms. His eyes compelled and caressed her. She drank in his look avidly. It thrilled and blessed her. “Merciful Father, he was meant for me. I must.” Suddenly between them came that triangle.

“Will you come, Carissima?”

She looked at the triangle and then at him, her lover, made from the beginning of the world. She waited, for she knew her answer would be irrevocable. Quickly she prayed, her hands before her face. She dropped them. She had decided. Her answer came slowly, clearly as from a soul unafraid of the future.

“Luigi, I love you. I shall love you forever. My race is calling me. You want me. Your country calls you. You must go. Luigi, you must go—and alone.”

Howard University Choral Society to Render “The Messiah”

Charles S. Adams
(The Journal’s Special Correspondent from the Conservatory of Music)

On Wednesday evening, December 28th, 1915, at 8 o’clock in Andrew Rankin Chapel, the Howard University Choral Society, under the direction of Miss Lulu Childers, will render that great oratorio of Handel’s, “The Messiah.”

It is the most representative of all the works of its class. In no form of music does one composition stand out head and shoulders above others as does this; not only from the viewpoint of the musician, but no other oratorio has enjoyed such enduring popularity and such positive adoration. Many generations have approved of it, and as different as the tastes of the Eighteenth and Twentieth centuries in most particulars by this work they both alike have been melted to tears and roused to higher aspirations.

A bit to its history. The composition of “The Messiah” was commenced August 22, 1741, and finished September 14th—a colossal work to accomplish in twenty-four days. Handel was at this time fifty-six years of age, and, with broad and mellow philosophy, endowed by experience and sorrow, was able fitly to approach his sublime subject; and, too, he was no doubt by nature pious and benevolent, although the many tales of his irascibility leave for the moment a different impression.

The first regular performance of “The Messiah” took place at noon on Tuesday, April 13, 1742 in Dublin, Ireland. London first heard “The Messiah” March 23, 1743, and since then in London between 1791 and 1861 it was given annually on Christmas Eve. In Boston it has been performed since 1818 by the Handel and Haydn Society alone nearly eighty times. In 1911 at Andrew Rankin chapel it was performed by the University Choral Society under the direction of Miss Childers with crowning success and this year it is expected to be more perfectly performed, taking under consideration the fact that the present society is the best in the history of the University.

Only two soloists have been selected yet as Miss Childers is especially desirous of giving the public the best that can be afforded.

Mr. Roland Hayes, the tenor soloist from Boston Conservatory of Music is well known to us all especially by his recent success in the performance of the “Children’s Crusade” here last spring.

Miss Lillian Evans, the soprano soloist of Howard Conservatory of Music, also established herself by her performance in the “Children’s Crusade” last spring.

The seats will sell for the low prices of 35, 50 and 75 cents so that the students may not be deprived of the privilege of witnessing this festival.

The Journal extends its congratulations to the two football teams that played the sportsman like game Saturday afternoon. The game was remarkably free from brutality, no one was seriously injured, and each team appeared to be anxious to give its opponent a square deal. Fairness on the part of players and officials was a feature of the game, and at no time did either team try to gain unfairly an advantage over its opponent.

Business in Athletics

Mr. Editor:

Just a word about business in athletics. Athletic activities in any university or even high schools are of such serious importance, and even when properly carried on are of such benefit to the school and individual students, that the same should be administered under strict principles of business. I fear that the Athletic Association of Howard University cannot be classed among those having such commendable course. It is quite a spectacle to see one of the leading officers of the Athletic Association chasing the Secretary of the University, after ten o’clock on the morning of the day a game is to be played, to know if he could construct a grandstand for the “rabble” on which to concentrate the yelling forces for that game. To further emphasize this palpable neglect, it should be known that the Association owns no material suitable for grandstands. Heretofore they have depended on any junk that might be assembled for that purpose. It is true that last year a grandstand was built through the energy of the Association’s Yell Master and the Secretary of the University, but it was not a permanent structure and the material had been picked as up odds and ends about the institution; therefore was not and could not be kept for grandstand purposes. Again, it may be well that the Association members know that officers, whose business it was to attend to it, applied to the Secretary of the University within an hour before the arrival of the visiting team for suitable quarters for that team. This was at night. Incidentally, there were no lights on the side of the campus where such provision might possibly have been made, but that made no difference to the Managers. They looked pout because the Secretary, who had a very important engagement in Baltimore, could not within five minutes meet the demand.

Again, a look at the field on Saturday when Virginia Union University played Howard would convince one that the officers who had charge of preparing the field were determined to disgrace the University as much as possible by the irregular, unbusinesslike, and mechanical way of setting the posts on which to attach the wire to keep the crowd back and the manner of marking the “gridiron.” These things indicate mismanagement or no management, all of which could be corrected very easily if the proper interest was taken in this matter by persons whose business it is to attend to it. It will not require greater expense to do better any more than it did to make a more creditable “tennis field".

THE HOWARD UNIVERSITY JOURNAL
An Up-to-Date Negro Newspaper

It is a marked fact that the colored people of the United States have never succeeded in establishing and maintaining a real, representative and up-to-date newspaper. There have been and there are some colored newspapers that do fairly well but when compared with modern newspapers they fall behind.

We need good newspapers all over the country, newspapers that are modern. That is the most effective means of showing the world what we are doing. Not only should our journals contain topics and items which concern the colored people but they should contain news which is of interest to everybody.

Appointment especially for Howard University

The non progress of colored newspapers has been due to a lack of capital, a lack of support on the part of the colored people themselves, and in a great measure, by the paucity of trained colored men in the field of journalism.

The lack of capital could be overcome by organization and cooperation. The lack of support is due largely to the inferior character of the majority of our newspapers. The paucity of trained colored men in the field of journalism should be overcome by the entrance of a greater number of our college men into newspaper work.

A great step, however, on the road of progress in Negro Journalism has been taken. "The Colored World," published by the Fair Publishing Company, Incorporated, of Philadelphia, is a real up-to-date newspaper and is the kind of newspaper that we need. It has just started and its success depends upon the support which it gets from the colored people. Every Negro ought to subscribe to this newspaper and let the good work go on. It is a weekly paper now but by proper support it may in time become a daily, and from that source who knows but that other first-class Negro newspapers will be established in other parts of the country. Give us an efficient Negro Press and with such a formidable weapon mountains of prejudice will be leveled to the plains and bulwarks of discrimination will be razed to the ground.

"The Colored World" has about thirty pages of live news of general interest. It does not devote a whole page to a description of Rev. Blank's rally or to the funeral of Mr. Johnson, and the parade of the Brothers of Hope, nor does the editor devote a whole issue to a tirade against some inferior who has aroused his ire.

"The Colored World" is modeled after the best newspapers in the country, with modern equipment, such as linotype machines and big electric presses. Such a newspaper will be appreciated by white people as well as by colored people.

The editorial page is very interesting. The editor ably discusses the important events of the world. The sporting page gives the results of colored and white athletic contests; comments on sports in general, collegiate and otherwise. The page devoted to the theatrical world discusses and gives all the theatrical happenings and events of general dramatic interest. There is one page which has all of the news items of the week boiled down for the busy reader. This is the style of newspaper that we have long needed; it has started right and with proper cooperation and support, "The Colored World" should in time become one of the leading newspapers of this country.

Howard Defeats Union 18 to 3

On the afternoon of the 30th, just a few minutes before three, Howard and Union were at the starting point of a memorable football game. The scene was on Howard’s gridiron. Eleven men, who represented the hope and confidence of Virginia Union University, faced eleven others who thrilled with the highest pitch of Howard loyalty. The moment was supreme. Concerted enthusiasm suddenly gave place to voiceless anxiety; for all realized that the glory of two illustrious Universities was about to be risked in the keeping of a selected few. Crouched upon the brink of uncertainty, victory smiled on no one.

A shrill whistle; a swift kick-off; and the two teams clashed in the mighty combat. The first few minutes of play were characterized by fumbles on both sides. The ball was first one team’s and then the other’s although the visitors struggled stubbornly to hold their ground, yet they were unable to withstand the repeated onslaught of the “Blue and White.” Howard’s gains were rapid. After a daring 15-yard run by Stratton, the ball was on the 10-yard line and before the husky Virginians could concentrate their resistance, Brice shot a forward pass to Grinnage, who received it back of the goal-line and thereby made the first touch-down of the game. Waters and Matthews were very effective in their blocking and it was due to such excellent team work that the forward pass was completed. When the ball was kicked-off again, Union played with renewed vigor. Unsuccessful she was in her attempts at forward pass, but her offense was hard and determined. The quarter ended with the ball in Union’s possession.

Second Quarter

Union punted; Pinderhughes handled it and, by skillfully eluding the opposition and following a perfect interference, advanced 15-yards. The forward pass proved a failure. At this stage of the game Howard suffered several penalties. Her long end runs, however, soon returned the ball near the goal line. Here Union demonstrated the strength and grit of her line formation. Four times Howard dashed into the enemy; four times she staggered backwards without gain. Again Howard was penalized for holding. Despite this she was able to keep the ball out of dangerous territory. This only for a short time. Union suddenly made a brilliant forward pass and several savage line plunges. When on the 35-yard line, Hucles drop-kicked, thus making the first and only score for his team. The performance was quick and artful. Just a few minutes after this sensation the quarter was over.

Third Quarter

With the scores 6 to 3, each team was equally determined to prove its superiority. They struggled and clinched with rejuvinated spirits. No time during the quarter did Union threaten to touch-down. Although successful in the forward pass, she was unable to advance the ball to any important extent. Howard was unsuccessful in her attempts at the forward pass. Both teams were penalized at very critical moments, as a result, the quarter ended without additional scores.
Last Quarter

In this quarter Union was completely out played. That pugnacious grit and impetus which characterized our gridiron stars in the glorious past now asserted themselves. The team unwittingly converted itself into a single energy, conscious of a required duty and sacred trust. At will it broke through the Union line and by the telling aid of organized interference, rushed the ball goalward. In an instant another touch-down was added to the general score. Pinderhughes failed to kick goal. In her display of confidence and skill, Howard now executed clever trick plays and fast line shifts with remarkable ease. The longest gain of the game was made by Stratton in an exciting forty-yard field run.

After this, urged on by songs and cheers, the ball was rushed over the goal. The scores were now 18 to 3, with seven minutes to play. Yet it seemed that Howard would score again. Following the wake of the mighty Bea­mon, Coleman advanced the ball twenty yards. The ball went over to Union; Union punted. The game was now a kicking contest, in which Hucles of Union was the undisputed master. With the ball in Union’s possession the referee’s whistle declared the game over. From all parts of the campus boisterous enthusiasm burst forth like distant roars of punctuated thunder and by this knew all that the “White and Blue” floated aloft, proclaiming the eternal Howard supremacy.
