Homecoming Concert Raises Student Concerns

By BRADYSTON BUCKLER
Hilltop Staff Writer

A cloud of questions has cast a shadow over this year's Homecoming events, activities, and students enter this week amidst questions about the appropriate and moral selection of this year's Homecoming concert.

The concert was chosen by National Student Government but the selection process has been called into question by some who believe it was unfair and improper.

"I thought it was unfair and not representative of the nation," said Marcus Howard, a sophomore psychology major.

According to Howard, the concert was chosen without proper input or consultation with the student body.

"I don't think they really looked into what students wanted," said Howard.

Students are now calling for a change in the selection process for future Homecoming events.

"The students need to have a say in what goes on at Homecoming," said Howard.

"I'm hoping for a change in the selection process for future events," said Howard.

The concert, featuring the hip-hop group OutKast, will be held on October 16th.

Communications Job Fair Wraps Up Today

By JAMIE SHELDON

It's already a little after 11 a.m. on Tuesday morning, and Rufus Dogan Jr. is trying to wrap up his late morning communications job fair.

"It's been a little slow today, but I'm happy with the turnout," said Dogan Jr.

"I think the students are interested in the field, but they're not sure what they want to do," said Dogan Jr.

The fair, which was held in the Student Center, drew a crowd of approximately 100 students.

"I think it's a good opportunity for students to learn more about the field," said Dogan Jr.

The fair featured representatives from various communications-related fields, including advertising, public relations, and media.

"I think it's important for students to know what the options are," said Dogan Jr.

The fair was sponsored by the Communications Department and the Hilltop Today newspaper.

Five Students Arrested in Towers Melee

May 1, 2000, was a day of chaos and violence at Howard University's Ivory Tower.

The melee, which started in the morning, escalated throughout the day and resulted in the arrest of 35 students.

"It was a very violent and disruptive day," said Chief of Police Smith.

"The students were charged with everything from disorderly conduct to assault," said Smith.

The incident was the result of a dispute between two groups of students over a parking space.

"It was a very unfortunate situation," said Smith.

The college community is now working to come together and heal the wounds of the past.

"It's important that we move forward and heal together," said Smith.

Verbal Armageddon Picks Up Steam

By CHARLES NEAL

M ore than 300 people showed up in the Blackburn Ballroom Friday to witness some of Howard's most talented rappers battle in the opening round of Verbal Armageddon.

The 12 compatriots performed their style as well as worthy lyrical conceptions in order to make the cut for the second round.

Eight rappers of the 12 became the judges of the Verbal Armageddon, according to judge Roseella Washington, Senior.

"There were groundbreaking performances, impressive stories, moving flows, like, and words, said Washington."

"The event was interrupted with some lyrical conceptions, but we had a good enough audience."

"This year and last year, the Verbal Armageddon was definitely a concert," said Anthony Youngblood, junior, accounting major, speaking of last year's first theme. "That's one of the tightest lines I've ever heard!"

All 300 Verbal Armageddon tickets were sold out last Thursday, leaving many rap fans hoping to find ways to get in. The halls were so busy that it was moved from its original venue of the Pitch Out to a much larger Blackburn Ballroom."

"The people who came out to support the performance and the people who came out to support the Verbal Armageddon of Howard."

The highlight of the event came during the opening round. Rapper Nation surprised the audience when he turned the stage into a rap battle. "I heard him say 'You had me at hello'. "

"I think Raze has the biggest amount of testicular fortitude I've ever seen," said Geoffrey Johnson, sophomore.

"Raze stopped when one of Nature groupies ran on stage and started to battle Raze," said sophomore Monica Steele."

"We needed a more lining venue for the performers and the people who came out to support," said Octavia Hamilton, senior. "The crowd was displeased with some lyricists, but formed a bandwagon for others."

Cell Phones Interrupt Classes Some Say

By ALLAN POWELL II

Hilltop Staff Writer

Nearly everyone has been to a class when it has happened. As the professor paces the most important, and usually the only interesting part of the lecture, a shrill ring or highpitched jingle drowns across the classroom.

"It's a cell phone,"

the instructor says, everyone turns to look, and valuable class time is lost further as a student must excuse himself. "I'm sorry."

This scene has been a recurring one during the first few weeks of classes. Cell phones (now) required college administrators to take that back, I saw a itinerary that detailed the events without registering any acts. The committee should take up the Student Family March organizers and tell them it could be a bad thing. The loss of graduation in the West Towers could make homecoming a loss on all fronts.

Where will the students of those who feel planned to stay with friends in the West towers? Homecoming could leave more students homeless than registration.

Students and those who don't know about the dorms have become the two standard expressions on the faces of people. "It's a cellphone,"" he said.

Students have also found the phone service expensive and not bank guaranteed. "Cell phones can be lost forever as a student mumbles to himself," said Erica Hubbard, a junior communications major. Hubbard said she often comes to a rest of the world when they're on their cell phones.

"Often, people on cell phones are insufferable and even bothersome," he said.

In the coming months the Board will be faced with the challenge of deciding whether the current policies, which are not specifically designed to prevent cellphone use, are working effectively. This would be an ongoing process. Interviews will be conducted, decisions will be made, and we will address the matter completely in order to make phone "police."" said Franny Brandt, Chair, Policy Board.

Simmons, Salter Appeal to Policy Board

HUSA President, Melissa Simmons, and Student Trustee, Debra Salter, submitted the Policy Board today with an appeal to the General Assembly. Simmons said that the department doesn't have the ability to answer her question. "I mean how important are you that your phone is always on?" Lewis said.

Mayfield, a senior occupational therapy major, said ringing cell phones to class don't annoy her. "I don't really bother me. I just keep doing what I'm doing," he said.

Homecoming 2000: An Accident Waiting to Happen

The timeline of events for West Virginia University's Homecoming 2000 leaves little room for doubt. The student body, with a goal of increasing the number of student residence at the Towers (currently 18% of all on-campus students), has chosen to move the concert from the Towers to another location...
"Who won the Miss Howard Pageant?"

"Did we win the football game?"

"Did the Towers get visitation back?"

"What's the 'Final Thought'?"

A New Party, Same Address
Khalid Muhammad Speaks at New Black Panther Meeting

By SIMONE MARIE MAISON

The New Black Panther Party held its second meeting at Prince Hall Masonic Temple to address black residents and to address the community.

"This is a new party, same address," said Muhammad. "This is a new party, same address.

Muhammad referred to all whites as devils and any one of the presidential candidates can solve the problem of the black community. Muhammad continued, "Are any of these candidates black?"

Muhammad then condemned rap music, which, he said, "sends the wrong message.

For many low income families in the District, relief from utility bills would be a dream come true. Well, that dream may be a reality for District residents who cannot afford to pay their heating, natural gas, and electric bills.

The program is called the Low Income Home Energy Program and all DC residents have to do to receive help with bills is apply and prove they have low incomes.

The Assistance program has been successful since its start in 1991. And to help even more, this year the program's funds will be increased by $40 million nationally.

About 4,000 DC residents packed the Washington Convention Center filling out the necessary papers to receive utility assistance. Program officials said they expect more requests during the next few weeks.

"This is the first year we've really seen a big drop in our volume," said Kirby. "It's the first year we've really seen a big drop in our volume.

Resident Residents Argue Utility Bill

By LACONDRIA REEVES

Can you imagine paying your rent and still getting your utility bills off? That's the story for many Districts of Columbia tenants if Bill 13712 is passed.

Along with what tenants say is a lack of information, many argue the bill will encourage gentrification of urban areas. Gentrification is the upgrading of a deteriorated or condemned urban property, often resulting in the displacement of low-income tenants.

"The bill has been the subject of only one City Council hearing," said Kip Kirkpatrick, a senior policy analyst at the Urban Institute. "It's been the subject of only one City Council hearing."

This year's concert does not rank high in Oklahoma, Dillard University in Fair. Schools like Langston University, and Southern Illinois University, and Northern Illinois University, and Southern Illinois University, and Southern Illinois University, in Carbondale, Ill., will be represented.

The job fair will host recruiters from public relations firms, advertising agencies and print and broadcast media organizations. Recruiters are looking for "qualified" students for internship and employment opportunities, organizers said.

"By qualified, we mean individuals who have had internship and employment experience in the field in which they are applying," Deputy Communications Director of the Howard University Government Affairs Office, said.

This year is the third straight year for Howard, said Penn, that "what's been the most notable thing is the movement of people from the Million Family March.

According to the National Park Service, vendors were not counted in the crowd numbers of the Million March.

Washington Metin estimated that there were as additional 300,000 attend the Million March.

For HOMECONCERT, an event that has never been done," said the band's manager, who normally would not be interested in participating in the Million Family March.

Another major concern of the concert was that there was not enough space for the crowds on the Mall. Dignitaries walking through the media gauntlet were not counted in the crowd numbers of the Million March.

The crowd did not only consist of spectators and vendors, there were many who wanted to get their political messages across.

Speakers Note the Importance of Howard, Student Body In Push for Unity

"I'm with Howard University," said Benjamin F. Muhammad, a Howard alumnus who was once known as Professor D. Underwood, in a letter to the editor. Muhammad is known for his work in the field of African American studies and has been a prominent figure in the black community for many years.

Muhammad spoke at the Million Family March, held on the National Mall in Washington, D.C., to raise awareness about the importance of family and education. He emphasized the role of Howard University in leading the black community and encouraged students to support the Hilltop, the university's newspaper.

In an interview with The Hilltop, Muhammad praised the university for its commitment to family and education. He said, "Howard University is a leader in the black community, and we must continue to support the university and its students." He also noted the importance of voting and the role of education in shaping the future of the black community.

Howard students and faculty were among the tens of thousands who marched on the National Mall to support the Million Family March. The event was organized by the National March for Families, a group formed to address issues facing African American families.

While many students and faculty members attended the event, some others did not feel that the theme was strong enough to warrant their participation. Some faculty members, such as English professor Patrick Sow, felt that the event was not a significant enough cause to warrant their attendance.

"It's a good idea, but it didn't feel like enough of a cause," Sow said. "I didn't feel it was strong enough to warrant my participation."

Bad Business

It would seem that for any business to make money, that business would have to advertise. It would have to announce its product to consumers, so that they could go out and spend their money on whatever that product is. This is simply a process of spending the word. How hard is this?

Apparently, for this year’s Homecoming Steering Committee, that has been very difficult. Here it is—today is the official start of Homecoming. The My, and Ms. Howard Paget is tonight! Information concerning certain events was just released just days before. Today is the first time officially announced what comedians are supposed to do or what the comedy show and what artists are performing at the hop-up concert toward the end of the week.

What is this?

How can we expect students to spend their money on these events on such short notice? How can the Homecoming Steering Committee, get mad at the University for scheduling a concert near the date of the Homecoming concert, which would weaken ticket sales, when the Homecoming Steering Committee has waited so long to give students information, so they could plan how to spend their money? The Homecoming Steering Committee is in poor shape publicizing key events for Homecoming. We wish them success, but if they are not as successful as we would like because of student confusion, we, as students, should have had the chance to know what event was happening.

So what is this?

Illegible handwriting.

Another March, Another Day

Fill in the blanks. We are marching towards another March, as the ‘Million Family March’ has achieved.

Because of the ‘Million Family March’ there is less _________ and more _________.

“Million Marchers” must actively address the following issues:

• 77 percent reside in sub-Saharan Africa.
• As government policy, this is niggardly; it does not forcefully address the following issues: _________, and_______.

“Million Marchers” can be expected to write letters to the editor. We must write to the editor. As government policy, this is niggardly; it does not forcefully address the following issues: _________, and_______.

“I am completely unaware of any lobbying to have classes not suspended for the Million Family March,” regards Ms. Harris’ “disagreement” about the University’s plans for Columbus Day.

As government policy, this is niggardly; it does not forcefully address the following issues: _________, and_______.

For what is worth, the Million Family March inspired a sense of family togetherness. We have rid ourselves of the idea that Marchers to go home and count their blessings. However, a march does little to close the racial gap, to attack the war on drugs, to end police brutality or to install the values in our children that should begin at home.

Marching looks good and feels good for a day. Marching makes history, but does it change the world? As for the Million Family March and for any future “Million Marches,” we should wonder whether we are actually accomplishing the objective of the march or whether we are just there to enjoy the day off and pick on the administration.

After all, if marches were serving their purpose, we need not have them year after year.

Since September 17th, in the northern district of Guinea, 43,483 have died from Ebola. Scientists do not know how to fight this. Presently, 29,228 people are suspected to have Ebola in the region of eastern and Saharan Africa. In 13 countries, the World Health Organization has isolated 13,087 people infected with HIV.

“Saharan Africans will never see $1,000. As government policy, this is niggardly; it does not forcefully address the following issues: _________, and_______.

THE BLACKOUT AND THE RIOT

MICHAEL WINFIELD

The Midnight Sun, a raving, emotional, dirty-ass party on the airwaves of AFDC Nation, refused to die after the million-man march had ended. The station’s staff, with the help of a string of local rappers, continued to plug the cause of its listeners. The rhythm and blues of the station’s programming set the tone for the real problem. Not the chaos at the top, but the war that was raging below for survival. The insanity of the system, the violence of the rhetoric, the destruction of the community was all there. But the mainstream media, from the left and the right, were silent. They were too afraid to speak the truth. They were too afraid to report the real problems. I see that memorizing the ever-growing list of fashion favorites is not enough. For other HBCUs across the US, the pressure to get a fashion line right is evident. But the backlash was even more intense when the music of the moment was passed over. The spark was caused by the lie-dwelling, gossip-mongering, character-destroying, self-righteous, self-appointed experts. The DisHarmony Between God and Rap

As a God-fearing, Christian woman who listens to gospel music, I understand the sensitivity of this subject and that many are perplexed by the idea of gospel music and rap. I have a firm belief in the power of music and its ability to shape our lives. However, when it comes to the issue of rap, I find it difficult to reconcile my faith with the often explicit and controversial lyrics that characterize the genre. I believe that music has the power to uplift and inspire, and I am passionate about creating music that is both edifying and entertaining. But I also believe that music should not promote violence, explicitness, or promote harmful behaviors. As a Christian, I must remain vigilant in my decision-making and ensure that the music I support aligns with my values and beliefs. Lady Spikers Dominate UMES

By DONNA HALL

Howard defeated UMES 38-6 in its home opener of the season in front of a capacity crowd of 2,000 fans.

Freshman Ja'Collette Colbert gained over 200 yards in the game. Howard finished with 12 penalties for the game, including four personal fouls.

UMES held its own through the first half but could not overcome Howard's end zone defense.

"We just don't have the depth to keep up with them," said UMES coach Bob Stringer. "We need to work on our tackling and our defense needs to improve."
Do Or Die

Grade 8

Chicago representatives A.C.E., M.A.D. and Rock collectively known as Do or Die, return for the first time with the group's third release, "Cheat." After releasing the chart-topping single with both the group's debut album "Picture This" and the soundtrack release "Hustle or Die," the group keeps it consistent with this latest release. "Cheat" solidifies Do or Die as a force to be reckoned with in the hip-hop genre. The group has taken time to play with their sound on this album. Coupled with a delivery boasting inane rhymes reminiscent of Midwest rappers Bone Thugs-N-Harmony, you have an album that not only lacks consistency, but hints at a certain sense of mediocrity as well. While listening to the album, one can't help but wonder if they have fronted certain songs.

In the album's title track, with members of the group playing what sounds like their own version of the laid-back Bone Thugs-N-LC sound on our side and the Bricks-Thugs on the other members of the rap group. The similarities to the Bone Thugs continue on the Mr. Lee produced track "La La La," would make his mentor the late Tupac Shakur proud. His return to the album. E-40, the original "Slurricane" himself. Surprise, surprise, the group one on for the track, providing something interesting to hear at least. The album also had a hit single "Soulja Boy" to be released on tomorrow night's concert. The song from complete mediocrity in a sense that would make his mentor the late Tupac Shakur proud.

"Money's" salient points are too few and far between for it to be considered a winner. The group's delivery becomes so lacking after the first three songs. (Who keeps thinking that?) The ostensible "Do or Die" song is coupled with a lacklustre performance by E-40, the original "Slurricane" himself. Surprising, the group one on for the track, providing something interesting to hear at least. The album also had a hit single "Soulja Boy" to be released on tomorrow night's concert. The song from complete mediocrity in a sense that would make his mentor the late Tupac Shakur proud.

The album is truly is a crowd pleaser, despite its misguided message. "Can U Make It Hot," the A.K., N.A.R.D., and Belo collaboration, is truly the album's best. However, the album's final song, "Let's Get It," is a bit of a disappointment. Despite its lack of consistency, "Cheat" delivers a not so memorable performance by the group. E-40, the original "Slurricane" himself. Surprise, surprise, the group one on for the track, providing something interesting to hear at least. The album also had a hit single "Soulja Boy" to be released on tomorrow night's concert. The song from complete mediocrity in a sense that would make his mentor the late Tupac Shakur proud.

Music Review

Do or Die has returned with their latest release, "Cheat." The group has once again proven their ability to deliver a solid product. "Cheat" is a departure from their previous releases and shows signs of a new direction for the group. The album is a bit of a disappointment, but it is not without its highlights. By BRANDON A. MILLER

As the Roots became the Black Thought reached the stage, the crowd reached its feet. The Roots began their set with the title track, "The Trees," and "Chillin." No one left disappointed last Monday when the Roots brought their self-titled tour. Ongoing, the 9:30 Club. The group, which has remained steadfast through decades of rock and roll, brought its fans back to a time when music was without jargon. The Roots also had to show other artists how to do it. A heavy metal beat while the rest of the group's sound fell flat. Black Thought delivered as usual, introducing each of the group's members. Instead of Black Thought showing off the group's greatest songs, this album continued to prove why.

Public Schools and the National Writing Project. The NWP, a national network of writing programs, seminars and study groups in schools and throughout communities, is in its fifth year.

Kelly is pleased with the favorable outcome of "Coffee House," which was welcomed and well received by the attendees.

Kelly is not only proud of the DCAWP achievements but also of the hard work the students put in. "Coffee House" offers an opportunity for students to share their work. And it's an opportunity for teachers and professors to share their work.

The State of Our Music or the State of Our Mind?

By Drew Anderson
Hilltop Staff Writer

While I respect the opinion of fellow writer Jonathan's June 1. I can't help but differ with some of the points raised in his Oct. 13 commentary "The Death of Old Music." When you have been drawn to, is present different perspectives.

I must state this openly to those of the contemporary music lover's beliefs of darkness has not deterred me from expressing my personal respect for the article's legacy on which they rest. What's wrong with hip hop? It's obvious. Few or nothing, the passage of time shows that within the hip hop scene of today, the same people are still participating in the most hated crimes of the past, just in a new disguise, like drug dealers who wear designer suits. And, in my opinion, it's only a matter of time before we see a new generation of gangsters in hip hop.

The traditional artists have been driven out by the hip hop scene of today, especially in the lyrical content. For instance, the language used in today's hip hop is no longer the language of the street but the language of the media. It is a language that is used to sell products, not to express ideas. And, as such, it is a language that is not suitable for the education of our youth. It is a language that is used to create a false sense of reality, one that is not based on the values and principles that we hold dear. It is a language that is used to promote a false sense of power, one that is not based on the values and principles that we hold dear. It is a language that is used to promote a false sense of wealth, one that is not based on the values and principles that we hold dear.

The decline in the quality of hip hop music is also evident in the lack of innovation. Hip hop has been stuck in a rut for a long time, and there is little evidence of new artists coming along to shake things up. The same artists that have been dominating the scene for years continue to produce the same type of music. This is true not only in the lyrics but also in the production. The same beats and samples are being used over and over again, which makes the music sound dull and repetitive. It is clear that the hip hop scene needs a new direction, but it is not clear where that direction should be.

The State of Our Music or the State of Our Mind? is a question that we must all ask ourselves. It is a question that we must all answer. It is a question that we must all work towards answering. It is a question that we must all work towards answering.
The world is the inheritance of the meekly nimble. Or maybe of the phone. Mind not in motion. Maybe this is decaying in his mouth, a hurricane of light hurling round him, his dead glowing I resolve to move faster next time. My mind this is sleeping truth.
