Students Puzzled By Mold Growth in Building Walls

Dehumidifiers Placed At Infection Sites

By COREY CUNNINGHAM
Hilltop Staff Writer

Howard Plaza Towers West resident Rebecca Grimes was surprised to learn that lie-like symptoms she experienced two weeks into the school year may have been triggered by potentially harmful mold forming inside the building's walls. "I was diag nosed with a flu, but it was one of those really weird flu's, sneeze, sniff, but that didn't seem to go away," said Grimes, a private physi cian who recommended a dehumidifier in the hallway to her floor in an attempt to alleviate symptoms.

Staff and faculty have attributed similar cold and allergy ill ness to mold infestation started after a storm that caused flooding in the ground level of several University facilities including Locke Hall, Better Geeks C.B., Panther Hall, and the Howard Plaza Towers.

Students in the East Towers have been evacuated from its ground floor and that the West Better area is still home to some students. The students said many common breathing problems could cause irreversible damage to the body's immune system leading to illness and death, if left untreated.

Students Continue to Push for Renovations

By LEONARDO BARCELLOS

The new Student Voice of Howard University campus housing. About 300 Howard students were enrolled on the campus, according to the university, which has remained closed since a building sitting there for 60 years. That didn't work. Let's try National's reopening would make the university's homecoming, which begins today.

The university has placed dehumidifiers in various locations, including the student's dormitories. However, it has been reported that the machine is not functioning as expected. The university officials said there were limitations on the use of plain-clothed air marshals, but they were in attendance, including during inspections that took place in the buildings.

The protesters were in attendance, including National's reopening would make the university's homecoming, which begins today.

The protests on the Howard campus were in response to the recently announced plans to renovate the buildings, which are over 100 years old. The protesters, who included members of the All-African People's Revolution Party (A-APRP), said they were in attendance to show their support for the protesters' demands, which include the removal of existing buildings and the construction of new ones.

The protesters also expressed their disappointment with the university's response to their concerns, stating that they were not taken seriously and that the university was more interested in maintaining its reputation than in addressing the residents' needs.

The university, however, said it was committed to finding a solution that would address the residents' concerns while also ensuring that the university's operations were not disrupted. The university also said it was committed to involving the residents in the decision-making process, and that it was open to suggestions and ideas from the protesters.

The protesters, however, said they were not satisfied with the university's response and that they would continue to hold protests until their demands were met. They also called on other universities and organizations to support their cause.

Construction in front of Health Science Library Continues

BY JACQUES SLAGHTER

Community Writer

The newest building on Howard's campus, the Louis Stokes Health Science Library, was initially scheduled to open in the fall of 2000. However, it was originally expected to open in the late spring of 2001, due to a number of problems, including delays in the construction of the student union. The construction, which officially began two weeks ago, is expected to be completed in two weeks.

This construction is no different to many other buildings this year. The health science library is being built on the north entrance to the library and is currently being worked on by a number of students. The construction has caused a lot of inconvenience for many students. "I feel safe leaving it at night," said sophomore in the Library around 11:30 PM when all of a sudden I heard a loud driling noise which continued for the next hour.

Some students hope to achieve more than just the educational background. "Anywhere in the country. We have a great opportunity and I feel thoroughly prepared."

Students Gain Edge at Job Fair

BY STEPHEN CROUCH

Contributing Writer

Hundreds of students attended "Career Exploration and Networking," a career fair held Wednesday in Blackman Center. The fair sponsored by the Career Services of Students Affairs featured over 55 companies representing government, corporate, non-profit, General Motors, and industry. Corporate America. Senior political science major Jonathan Peterson feels that Howard provided a good work base for the student graduate. Corporate companies are looking for the students in the work force. For instance they have an organization called ICPD that provides the students with opportunities, which are great for students to go out and succeed anywhere in the country. We have a great opportunity and I feel thoroughly prepared. "Corporate America..."

Low Turnout at Speaking Forum

BY CHARLES CUMMINGS

Staff Writer

Although freshmen students were afforded the opportunity to voice their concerns, possible solutions to the low turnout at the Speaking Forum at the University, very few students were interested in participating. Howard University Student Association sponsored "President Speak- ons" on three previous occasions, however, interest from the students was not as high.

The program, hosted by HUSA and sponsored by President G. Edward Davis, gave freshmen a chance to discuss their ideas for improving school with HUSA and fellow freshmen.

"Some students expressed the need for more speakers than what was available." According to the program, freshmen summarized their concerns about the forum, including academic pressure, lack of recognition for students, and low turnout at the Speaking Forum.

The program is designed to provide students with a platform to express their opinions and ideas. However, the students who did attend the forum expressed that they would like to see more speakers and different topics. The forum was held in the Library to encourage students to participate in the Speaking Forum, which is designed to provide a voice for all students at the University.
Students Puzzled by Mold Growth in Building Walls

From A1

1. Instead of worrying, why not just go on a camping trip with some friends. According to Dr. Williams, at least 80 percent of the space you need in your backpack can be covered by a small blanket. And if you're worried about getting cold, just bring a small sleeping bag.

2. For those who are worried about mold, consider using a dehumidifier to help reduce the humidity in the building. This will help prevent mold from growing in the first place.

Bethune Hall Unlikely Solution to Housing Crunch

From A1

1. The most promising solution appears to be the construction of new dormitories on campus. This would provide additional housing for students and help alleviate the current crunch.

2. Another option is to increase the number of scholarships and financial aid available to students. This would allow more students to afford to live on campus rather than off.

Students Required by Airport Reopening

From A1

1. Students will be required to show identification and pass a security screening before boarding airplanes. This is to ensure the safety of all passengers.

2. The new regulations are expected to take effect immediately, and students are advised to plan accordingly.

Psychology Professor Conducts Study on Cardiovascular Activity

From A1

1. Dr. Williams conducted a study on cardiovascular activity among students. The study involved monitoring heart rate and blood pressure during various physical and mental activities.

2. The results showed that students experienced a significant increase in cardiovascular activity during stressful situations, such as exams or public speaking.

Summer III for Junior Nursing Students

From A1

1. Summer III is a program designed for junior nursing students to gain practical experience. It is offered by the College of Nursing and Healthcare Professions.

2. Interested students should contact the Office of Nursing Education for more information.

Jumping the Gun?

The nation's recent attacks have sparked an increase in paranoia throughout the country. Locally and nationally gun sales have increased as citizens try to protect themselves from possible terrorists in their communities. Virginia State Police back ground checks for handgun applicants increased by 37 percent the week of the attacks, while nationally the FBI noted a 15 percent increase in the number of handgun applicants from September 11-13. In addition, sales of gas masks and other related safeguards against possible biological warfare have increased. Many have also begun to stock up on essentials such as water and canned foods.

In the midst of this panic, Attorney General John Ashcroft's appearance last Sunday on "Face the Nation" didn't provide much comfort. In his appearance, Ashcroft declared that there was a "clear and present danger" of more terrorist attacks. What, however, can actually be done to protect yourself from terrorists attacks? Surely, if the Central Intelligence Agency of the United States cannot detect the plans of terrorists owning a gun will not protect you. Terrorists don't usually make house calls anyway. Owning a gas mask may seem ideal, but unless you plan on carrying your gas mask (and bio-hazard suit) with you everywhere you're only protected when you're at home.

As the dust settles after the destruction of the World Trade Center and hundreds of the Pentagon on September 11th, many people in the progressive community are left wondering about America's response. Some argue that the United States has already embarked on a war aimed at eliminating terrorism as a threat. Many others believe that resolution will take years and a significant financial investment. Why You Sweatin’ Me?

Sweaters are a must-have for fall. They add warmth and style to any outfit, making them a versatile choice for any occasion. With the weather cooling down, sweaters can enhance any outfit and keep you warm while still looking fashionable. Whether you choose a chunky knit or a lightweight sweater, there’s a style for everyone.

Looking for the perfect fall sweater? The best choices are chunky sweaters, mock necks, and any style with long sleeves. These will keep you warm while still looking stylish. Chunky knits are great for layering and can be paired with jeans or a skirt. Mock necks are perfect for layering under a coat or jacket and can be paired with any pants or skirt.

what to wear, has perplexed some and inspired others. "I'm looking to see the different styles people have," one student said. "I want to see what the homecoming is all about. I want to see what everyone is wearing for the homecoming," the student adds.

A few labels on the getting edge this year's homecoming fashions include: Converse, Pendl, Prada, Dolce and Gabbana (D&G), Louis Vuitton, Giorgio, Brooks Brothers, Christian Dior, and Kenneth Cole. Bebe, Gap, Banana Republic, Arden B., Bloomingdale's, David, Nine West, Urban Outfitters, Fossil, Neiman Marcus, Lifestyles, and Express through student polling, were deemed as some of the best stores to shop.

The ladies are sure to fall in love with track 5. Every night club-goers hitting the dance floor. This album will make you think, all at the same time. Without a doubt, Ja Rule is here to stay. He maintains his gritty street sound with the next couple of tracks. "T and $" is a half a million sold the first week and that is exactly what he has done on his latest album. "The air is crisp and the nights are getting longer - I'm real, you can't help but to get caught up in the sweet promise of reunions, good times, and high fashion. The homecoming yard fest proves to be a day of prances, great times and high fashion. The runway is set, and the audience is watching."

New York U. Feels Costs of Student Aid After Attacks

By Jennifer C. Smith

Washington Square News (New York U.)

(NEW YORK) — New York University has offered myriad services to University members who have been affected by the World Trade Center disaster, resulting in huge expenses for the University.

New York University has offered myriad services to University members who have been affected by the World Trade Center disaster, resulting in huge expenses for the University. Lynne P. Brown, vice president of student affairs, said the costs to NYU ran into millions of dollars, although final figures have not been tallied.

"Money for the stipend, hotel, etc., came through the normal University budgetary process and regular cash flow," University spokesman Jim Beckman said.

"We are also seeking reimbursement through our insurance, emergency government aid and other sources of revenue," he said.

A limited supply of free phone cards were distributed to displaced students, and phone banks were established in the Violette Cafe and Bobst Library. Staples provided free notebooks, pens and calculation to students. Also, Information Technology Services (ITS) has created a "loaner" program, cooperating with computer companies to loan computers to students until Jan. 21.

NYU Bookstores donated a second set of textbooks so students wouldn't fall behind in their classes. They also gave a free six-meal plan while they were removed from their dormitories.

"We are in discussion with the hotels to receive a portion, as they were not paid for the full amount of time that was expected," Brown said.

"We had reservations for one in the burnt area; the ground floor was discussed. The factors were options for removal," she said.

Another option for the TVS was the hiring of private national alphabet contractors and environmental consultants to test the environmental safety of the structure. NYU continues to face costs, even after most students have returned to their dorms. The University also has provided time-share cell phones for student use at the front desks of Water Street and Lafayette Street, as students are still without phone service.
