On the cover is the former campus of Dunbarton College, a women's liberal arts school, which Howard University purchased early this year from the Sisters of the Holy Cross. The University's School of Law has been relocated here as well as several graduate research institutes, the University Press, the University Legal Counsel, the Department of Alumni Affairs, and New Directions editor's office. The four buildings on the 19.4-acre property, at 2935 Upton Street, N.W., comprise about 220,000 gross square feet. The campus is bounded on the south by Upton Street, on the north by Yuma and Van Ness Streets, on the west by Connecticut Avenue, on the east by the Geophysical Lab of the Carnegie Institution of Washington. See story on page 16. (Color photo by Roland L. Freeman).
