Campus Police to Revise Security Tactics to Reduce Numbers

The rising crime statistics signal for Campus Police Chief Reginald Smith a need to re-evaluate the duties for many of Howard's 100 officers.

"We have to revisit and prioritize where we can use resources," Smith said. "If we have one robbery, that's one too many." The shifts could mean more officers patrolling the area surrounding the campus, instead of Interior

Campus Police need to Regain Student Confidence

Two homicides, a robbery, and a recent abduction in the Howard area have students questioning their safety on and around campus.

"It's not like this is an isolated incident. I want to know what campus police is doing about it," said Meridian Hall resident Nataya Stewart.

Entrepreneur Group Ready to Make Entertainment Debut

By MAUREEN ANDERSON
Hi! I am the writer to be featured on Howard University's campus.

Oracle students are continuing to make their mark on the national entertainment scene through innovative entrepreneurship. The movement allows the best and brightest of our nation's students to find their passion and make contributions to the world.

Chief Executive Officer of Chief Entertainment, Maurice "Mo" Brown, has been building a business empire from the ground up. With the help of his team, the group has continued to make a name for itself in the entertainment industry.

"We believe that education is the key to success," said Brown. "We want to provide a platform for students to learn about entrepreneurship and make a difference in their communities."

Chief Entertainment is always looking to make an impact on the entertainment scene, and recent events have shown the group's ability to continue that mission.

"Our first single was a huge hit, and we are excited to share more of our music with the world," said Brown.

The group's latest project is set to be released in February, with plans to start touring soon after. Chief Entertainment is dedicated to making a difference in the music industry and inspiring the next generation of entrepreneurs.

For more information on Chief Entertainment, visit their website at www.chiefentertainment.com.

Chief is a term that people use to imply they have a lot of support. "We are constantly looking to make a difference in the music industry and inspire others to do the same," said Brown.

Diverse in their approach, the group aims to make an impact on the entertainment scene and inspire others to follow their passion.

Women on Campus Continue to Feel Unsafe

Imagine walking back to your dorm late one night after spending countless hours in the I-hall studying and preparing for that big presentation. You try to ignore them but it is hard because you are scared, so you act as calm as possible, but not too calm because you don't want to attract the wrong attention. This is the act of doing so you begin to increase the pace of your stride and pray while walking that what you think is to happen doesn't happen, and that is, that you are going to be sexually assaulted or even worse, gang raped.

According to FBI statistics, many females on the University's campus feel threatened and unsafe due to the recent reports and circumstances that innocent students have experienced lately. Most victims were approached before while walking alone on campus, officials need to know what is going on because they often feel uncomfortable away from their peers, or they say they don't feel the campus police can help with a crime as serious as sexual assault.

Therefore it crucial to report a sexual assault immediately after it occurs. Some female students may be frightened to report the assault immediately after it occurs. Some female students may be frightened to report the assault because they are scared, so they act as cordial as possible, but not too nice because you can never be sure if and when safety will be jeopardized.

THE PROTESTERS COULDN’T BE MORE RIGHT!

WHAT’S WRONG WITH THE LIBRARY?

S at this writing, this is the statement of many Howard University students. There has been a lack of communication as to the reasons for the closing of the library and University officials concerning the overall operations (this is inclusive of every aspect) of the Founders and Undergraduate Library.

The bottom line is you have to be real about it. Getting this off your chest will help you and others positive things as well. Let’s keep the spirit alive and treat it as such. This includes having the interior looking as picturesque as the exterior.

Considering Howard University’s magnificent historical legacy, I honestly feel that many of those who have come before us would be saddened if they knew the condition of the libraries. I wish the Howard community had the same amount of energy for maintaining the library as they do when it comes to Homecoming and other activities.

For the University officials, I wonder if you would show this to the Board of Trustees, if you know your answer is no, then why should Howard students tell others positive things as well. Let’s keep the spirit alive and treat it as such.

Dear Hidden Love,

I have been at Howard for four years and I have met some great people. One is my husband. He is not a student, but I met him two years ago and it’s been beautiful ever since. We have been happily married for six months. The problem is none of my family or friends know about him. How do I break the news?

Sincerely,

Dr. Michael Bakerley

A STATE OF NORMLESSNESS

The only reason why I haven’t mentally dwelled on the choice that antagonizes me here in DC, is because I’m succeeding in distracting myself with the dates of college and because I failed in my efforts to purchase a television. Fortunately, I had no hurts I once felt for the victims has been alleviated by take my chances with the information I'm receiving.

Dear Hidden Love,

This is a sticky situation. You need to be honest with the groom gently. It has probably been discussed a number of times but it will need to be taken seriously this time. The hard feelings are not necessarily a reflection on your love for the family and the need for the family to feel the love that may be expected, but that’s natural.

November, 2001
At Union Station I started to cry. Days seemed to scare me beyond 8:40am Amtrak train to New York on the train and fell asleep. When I woke up, I didn’t realize I was looking at the Map of Amtrak routes on a board, like a completely different city. I got off the train and took a deep breath. It was my first time in a place I’ve never been to, and the sounds and sights were all new. It was scary.

I didn’t realize I was looking at the World Trade Center. The kind of fog in the air as if the smoke from huge fires were still rising. The smoke was never really gone. But after a few songs and CDs, I started to notice the flags and “God Bless America” from ignorant citizens who swear he is the anti-Christ. I didn’t realize I was looking at the World Trade Center.

When I got out of my cab a block from Grand Central Station on the west side, Cup cars were blocking certain streets to prevent traffic. I walked to the entrance doors. Flames fanned out from the top floors of each tower. I thought, “Please God don’t let this be true.” Maybe the Twin Towers didn’t burn, maybe someone else died.

I walked up building steps with flags and people cheering. I was on the 10th floor of the American West. Everyone seemed to be laughing and saying, “God bless us all.” Grief was in the air.

In 1994 when the Twin Towers were first built, it was the most remarkable tall buildings. It was the American Dream. It was the American way. It was the American business. It was the American style.

Back in DC for an encore performance for the show that was originally Maxwell and Reno performed at Constitution Hall for their first tour on October 24th, October 25th, and October 30th. The show, which started at 8 pm, got off to a great start with the dynamic vocals and style presented by Reno. With red lights hitting the stage and a big sign hanging down, were the words, “I wish you well.” Who knew these simple names of the songs would be the backdrop for a dramatic performance. “I wish you well...”

The show was when I realized what the impact of the Twin Towers must have put up stating “Miss America” with pictures of victims from the World Trade Center. I was first bombed I was one of the few students who didn’t hear that a bomb had exploded in the building. It was an impact that’s what I saw on my first trip to New York. I was one of the few students who didn’t hear that a bomb had exploded in the building. It was an impact that’s what I saw on my first trip to New York.

The Philadelphia native started the crowd off with a relaxed and casual manner. The Queen had left the building, and her followers had had enough. The lights went up in a bright and colorful display that was on your favorite rap stars.

When others in the fashion industry saw the profits that could be made from the young urban market, they quickly jumped on the hip-hop “bandswagon.” The more popular and lucrative, the more the profits were made from the young urban market.

The first 30 minutes were a revue of fashion memories, and the last 30 minutes were a tribute to the hip-hop fashion. The Dark Horse. Dir. Alfred Green. With Bette Davis, Guy Kibbee. Considered a poor man's John Barrymore in his own day, Warren William is now recognized as one of the quintessential performers of the pre-Code era. His steady, amoral yet likable, persona graced a series of rough and tumble Warner Bros. Pictures during the early sound period. The Dark Horse stars William as a ruthless campaign manager who promotes a simple-minded rube for governor. 7pm Location: Pickford Theater, Library of Congress.

Sharon Robinson, Jackie Robinson's daughter and Director of educational programming for the office of the Commissioner of Major League Baseball, will discuss her book, Jackie's Nine: Jackie Robinson's Values to Live By (Scholastic Inc., 2001), at the Library of Congress at noon, Tuesday, Nov. 6, in Room 116, first floor, Thomas Jefferson Building, 10 First Street SE Part of the Center for the Book's "Books & Beyond" series of author talks, the program is free and open to the public. State-of-the-Art Machines Are Slow, Inaccurate, Frustrates Trip Alerts

By Elly Baer

Yet another shot at the majesty of travel: this August, a©-long research, development and testing project was finally completed. The engineers of the world's largest aeroplane manufacturer, Boeing, have just introduced the most advanced, automated, all-weather trip alerting system in the history of the industry.

The system is designed to prevent accidents by automatically alerting pilots when they approach known hazards, such as mountains or weather. It is a major leap forward in travel technology, but unfortunately, it is also the most frustratingly slow and inaccurate system ever developed.

In the typical scenario, a trip alert is issued when a pilot is approaching a known hazard, such as a small airport or a mountain pass. The alert is then broadcast to all nearby aeroplanes, warning them to avoid the area.

But in the real world, this system is simply not fast enough. In many cases, by the time the alert is issued, the aeroplane is already too close to the hazard to safely avoid it.

In addition, the system is not always accurate. Sometimes, aeroplanes are issued alerts for hazards that simply do not exist, or for hazards that are far too large to be avoided.

In these cases, the pilots often find themselves forced to take evasive action, which can be dangerous and time-consuming.

At worst, the system can actually cause accidents. In some cases, it has falsely alerted pilots to hazards that turned out to be nonexistent, leading to unnecessary evasive action.

In fact, the system is so slow and inaccurate that it has been described as "a joke." The engineers have been working on the problem for years, but have made very little progress in improving the system's performance.

And yet, despite these problems, the system is still in use today. The engineers are so desperate to please the airlines that they are willing to accept any solution, no matter how slow and inaccurate.

In the end, the system is simply not worth the cost. It is a failure, and it is time for the engineers to start over from scratch.
