The April Issue

I have read with great enthusiasm the April 1976 issue of New Directions—my first exposure to this publication. Dr. W. Montague Cobb's article, "What Is Man?: An Anatomist's View," is the most sensible, practical and intellectually astute rebuttal to Dr. William Shockley that I have ever read.

As a Black educator responsive to the needs of developing children, New Directions should prove helpful in my work.

I recently saw a copy of the April issue of your excellent publication in the office of our city's mayor. As a broadcaster on "Talk Radio," I found the April issue, particularly the article on the origin of man, to be useful in my work.

I hope that your publication becomes a genuine and not merely new clothing for the tired old enemies of freedom; colonialism, oppression and slavery. Much of the April edition seemed to be devoted to whipping a dead horse—the minor role of the United States in the recent Angola embroglio. There was little suggestion of the danger of a new type of colonialism under new and very vicious white masters.

Pace-Setter

I would like to commend you on your journal, New Directions. I've found it to be very informative, interesting, and invaluable.

As a vivid reader, I must say that your journal should set the pace for other Black institutions to publish their own journals.

First Experience

Recently, I had my first experience reading your great journal and found it very interesting. I read the journal from front to back and learned something every moment, and with every page.

Keep struggling and struggle to continue such a thorough document.

Richmond, Virginia

I saw a copy of your magazine by accident. Having read it to the end, I found it very useful. I appreciate your hard work.
