Scope and Contents

The papers of journalist, educator, and politician, Alice A. Dunnigan (1906-1983), span the period of 1947-1977 and measure approximately 13 linear feet. Biographical data, correspondence, writings by and about Dunnigan, organizational affiliations, and scrapbooks document her activities as a pioneer in the fields of journalism and politics.

Alice Dunnigan accomplished numerous "firsts" in journalism. As Chief of the Washington Bureau for the Associated Negro Press (ANP), she was one of the first African American women accredited to the White House press corps and to the House and Senate press galleries. Within the collection, newspaper clippings and writings about Dunnigan reflect her experiences and her unique perspective on the activities of Washington. In 1948 she became one of the first African American journalists to travel with a U.S. president (Truman) on a cross-country political campaign. Scrapbooks, newspaper clippings, and correspondence document this trip.

During the Kennedy and Johnson administrations, Dunnigan applied the skills that she had acquired during her tenure in journalism to a career in politics. She accepted an appointment as education consultant to the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity (PCEEO) and travelled the country promoting the organization and its efforts to provide employment to all Americans. The bulk of the collection -- articles, addresses, reports, and organizational affiliations, reflect these efforts.

Alice Dunnigan donated her papers to the Moorland-Spingarn Research Center in 1974.

Correspondence

Spanning over twenty five years, the bulk of this series covers Dunnigan's professional activities. Dunnigan's career as a newspaper woman is documented through her correspondence with Claude Barnett and Enoc Waters, Jr. of the ANP, as well as with editors of such newspapers as the Pittsburgh Courier and the Louisville Defender. The bulk of this series relates to Dunnigan's accomplishments as education consultant for the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunities. Significant correspondents from the PCEEO include John Feild, William Kendrick, Hobart Taylor, and Albert Walls. Other important correspondents from this time period include Elizabeth Carpenter, Charles Diggs, Rosa Gragg, Dorothy Height, Lyndon B. Johnson, Melvin Maas, Vivian Mason, Henry Moon, and Dean Rusk. Also of note in this series are the many letters that Dunnigan drafted for Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey while working for the President's Council for Youth Opportunity. All the letters are arranged alphabetically by correspondent.
