Board of Trustees
Take Action Concerning Hilltop

By Susan McNair

According to Matt Hennessey, interim director of the Office of Communications, the Board of Trustees has taken action to remove Howard University President Michael W. Faust from the position of trustee. Hennessey said the board has decided to appoint new members to the board and has also decided to discuss the possibility of creating a new position, the position of "trustee emeritus," which would allow the former president to continue to serve on the board.

The Board of Trustees met on Thursday, April 18, to discuss the issue and decided to appoint new members to the board. Hennessey said the new members will be announced at a later date.

The board also discussed the possibility of creating a new position, the position of "trustee emeritus," which would allow the former president to continue to serve on the board.

"We want to make sure that the board has the ability to continue to provide oversight and guidance to the university," Hennessey said. "We also want to ensure that the university has a strong voice in the future."

HELP...
Only A Phone Call Away

By Nettie Hauenfield

Get a problem? Call Hotline, 636-6878, for help with problems and conflicts. This is the number the Howard University Police Department has set up for the purpose of making the campus a safer place to live.

A hotline is a number you can call for advice, help or just to talk. Hotlines are not a substitute for counseling or therapy, but they are a way to talk to someone about your thoughts or feelings.

Hotlines are available 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

The Howard University HOTLINE utilizes approximately 100 volunteers who are trained by volunteer training and information and referral services.

The HOTLINE operates from 7 a.m. to 11 p.m. on weekdays.

Because of the number of calls to which the HOTLINE offers, it is crucial to practice patience on campus, yet students remain open to suggestions on how to operate the HOTLINE.

I want to keep this number available to students. Typically students call the University HOTLINE and ask questions about Howard University and the greater community.

So, if you need help, call the HOTLINE.

In regards to the University HOTLINE, I am a student and I support the hotline.

There are so many calls to the HOTLINE and there are so many suggestions that are made.

The student or the person who needs help or information is issued a hotline.

The hotline is a way for people to express their thoughts and feelings.

The霍道特民族研究者还强调，家庭暴力是普遍存在的现象，特别是针对女性的暴力。家庭暴力包括身体暴力、性暴力和情感暴力。家庭暴力不仅对受害者造成身体和心理上的伤害，而且对整个家庭和社会造成负面影响。

该热线还提供了一个平台，让 Howard University 的学生可以寻求支持和帮助。学生可以在这个平台上分享他们的经历，也可以得到其他学生的建议和鼓励。热线还提供了各种资源，如法律援助、心理咨询服务等，帮助学生解决他们的问题。

总的来说，Howard University HOTLINE 是一个重要的资源，它为学生提供了一个安全的平台，让他们可以分享他们的经历，寻求支持和帮助。同时，它还提供各种资源，帮助学生解决他们的问题。

1983 D.C. Budget Over 2 Billion

In Washington, D.C.

The House and Senate voted today to enact legislation that would increase the District of Columbia's budget from $950 million to $2.5 billion in fiscal 1983. The bill, introduced by Rep. John Dingell (D-Mich.), would authorize the appointment of a three-member panel to oversee the implementation of the new budget.

The budget includes a General Fund of $1.5 billion, a Capital Improvement Fund of $400 million, and a Revenue Fund of $100 million. The budget would also provide for a $100 million increase in the tax on motor vehicle licenses.

Local officials have expressed support for the new budget, which they say is necessary to ensure the financial stability of the city. The budget was approved by a 31-16 vote in the House and a 23-14 vote in the Senate.

The bill now goes to Gov. Betty Thomas (D), who is expected to sign it into law. The budget will take effect on July 1, 1983.
It's a sad but true fact that, along with the pressures of registration, education, transportation and accreditation, students must also deal with the viciousness of having to walk through campus at night or walk to a dorm in the dark. Maybe wandering in the dark depths of DC is not the most pragmatic thing to do, but sometimes it can't be avoided, like when shuttle buses fail to arrive, but that's another issue. The fact exists that many students from time to time are mugged, and even beaten from campus after the sun has long gone down. And those walking in the shadows are a stranger who is either counting our footsteps, waiting for us to turn the corner, or following behind us, waiting for us to turn around.

When sex is complete, the crime has typically been committed. And when security arrives, it's usually too late—the crime has already been committed, and all we can do is wave goodbye to our valuables and our dignity.

I know my eyes aren't failing me. I mean I see so many security guards on and off campus, so I know they exist. And late at night while walking through my dorm I can even hear them snoring in the lobby. But where are they in times of distress? Of course, they're not omnipresent and don't possess a sixth sense for determining where a crime is being committed. But too many crimes are occurring throughout campus at an unbelievable frequency. If many of our security personnel are caught in a crime with an sharpened eye as spotting pretty women on campus, Howard's crime statistics might be cut in half.

The Hilltop encourages its readers to turn in their suggestions, that nearly half of the 5 million student aid applicants are males of our security force by any means. Many of them do a very commendable job but many don't, and students suffer for it. There are several other factors that can be attributed to the high crime rate that has victimized the Howard community: such as not walking alone at night, but, as I mentioned earlier, sometimes circumstances like that are inexcusable. Another factor is the victim's failure to report the crime after it has happened, that letting the robber or assailant go scot-free to select another victim. And still another factor, as previously cited, is our location in the city. The chance that we get assaulted because we are "Howard students" (or pronounced "How-aed") by many non-students in the District is very slim. The fact is, we're accessible. From an assailant's point of view, why catch the G-2 and rob someone in Georgetown when there is a university centered in our own domain? Yes, the location of Howard University is indeed a factor.

These reasons and many more contribute to the number of burglaries, robberies, rapes and assaults that affect the Howard community each year. And only we, in conjunction with an alert security force, can control this unfortunate dilemma. It's a tragedy that a school known as the "mecca of black education" also has to be labeled the "mecca of black on black crime."
South Africa of the 1950s and 1960s was a scene of vibrant social and cultural dynamism. The legacy concept of apartheid, the political system imposed and maintained by the white minority, was looking for ways to use art, literature, music, theatre, and film as tools to promote its ideology and cultural norms. The tension between the two worlds was exacerbated by the fact that the majority of the population was living on the margins of the country, often in squalid conditions and deprived of basic human rights. In this context, anti-apartheid arts and culture flourished, with writers, poets, musicians, and performers勇敢地 using their platforms to challenge the status quo and inspire a sense of solidarity among the oppressed.

Outstanding Struggles to Remember

Open Letter to Howard University

Albert John Lutuli

Theodore George "Ted" Blood, M.D., M.P.H.

In the light of recent events, it is essential that we reaffirm our commitment to the principle of self-determination of all people, especially the people of South Africa and Southern Rhodesia. Our struggle remains as relevant today as it was then, and we must continue to support the fight for freedom and justice.

Albert Lutuli

Albert Lutuli was a member of the African National Congress (ANC), the main opposition party and movement against the apartheid regime. He was a lawyer and a prominent figure in the anti-apartheid movement, serving as the President of the ANC from 1961 until his death in 1967. Lutuli was a strong advocate for non-violent resistance and played a key role in the development of the ANC's strategy of umkhonto we sizwe, or "spear in our hands", which was a military and political campaign to dismantle the apartheid system.

Lutuli emphasized that this would be an armed struggle, but only as a last resort. He believed that the ANC should focus on grassroots organizing and community mobilization to create a broad base of support for its demands. Lutuli was a vocal critic of the ANC's leadership under Mandela, whom he accused of being too cautious and focusing too much on international recognition at the expense of local-level work.

Lutuli's message was clear: the struggle for freedom and justice in South Africa was not just about the ANC's political objectives, but about the fundamental rights and freedoms of all South Africans. He called on the international community to support the anti-apartheid movement and to impose sanctions on South Africa until it ended its system of racial segregation and discrimination.

Lutuli's legacy lives on through the work of the African National Congress and the continued struggle for freedom and justice in South Africa and around the world. His words serve as a reminder of the power of non-violent resistance and the importance of unity and solidarity in the fight for a just and equitable society.

Apartheid: Oppression in South Africa

ECONOMICS

Before the Europeans moved into the area, the inhabitants of South Africa engaged in a variety of activities including hunting, foraging, and fishing. They had a rudimentary economy based on subsistence farming and hunting.

After the European colonization, the economy of South Africa underwent significant changes. The introduction of cash crops and the establishment of mining and manufacturing industries played a crucial role in the development of the economy. The wealth generated by these activities supported a growing middle class and a growing industrial sector.

However, the economy was marked by significant disparities, with the white minority benefiting disproportionately from access to resources and opportunities. This led to widespread poverty and inequality among the black majority.

Despite these challenges, South Africa has continued to grow in recent years, with its diversified economy supporting industries ranging from manufacturing and mining to services and tourism. The country has also diversified its energy sources, with significant investments in renewable energy.

FAIRS IN BRIEF

A meeting in Switzerland with the Director-General of the United Postal Union, Mr. Mohammed Sobhi, followed the re-admission of South Africa into the Universal Postal Union. He stated that South Africa’s apartheid policy was in defiance of the United Nations.

A copy of the Ambassador’s statement was released in Lagos on Tuesday.

Meanwhile, the Minister of Communications, Mr. Audu Ogbe, has announced in Lagos that the African bloc of the postal union would raise the issue of the re-admission of South Africa at the Union’s meeting scheduled for next year.

SOUTH AFRICA

South Africa’s postal system has been in operation since the mid-19th century. The system is currently divided into four main regions: the Western Cape, Eastern Cape, Northern Cape, and Eastern Transvaal.

The postal system is managed by the South African Post Office, which is a state-owned enterprise. The postal service provides a range of services, including mail delivery, courier services, and electronic communications.

The postal system is under threat due to rising costs and a decline in traditional mail usage. There have been efforts to modernize the postal service, including the introduction of electronic mail and online services.

ZAMBIA

Zambia has a rich historical background, with a mix of African and European cultures. The country has a diverse economy, with significant contributions from agriculture, mining, and manufacturing.

The economy is characterized by a high level of inequality, with a small wealthy class benefiting disproportionately from the country’s resources. The government has implemented various policies to address these disparities, including the introduction of a universal basic income.

However, the economy has faced challenges, with significant fluctuations in copper prices affecting the country’s revenue. The government has been working to diversify the economy and reduce its reliance on copper.

The combination of these factors has led to a complex and challenging situation, with significant efforts underway to address the country’s economic challenges.

Conversation With African Journalist
Zwelink Sigul

By Carliss Spencer
Special to the Detroit News

There is a continuing debate between the South African and the industrial world on the role of the United States government in the country's political situation. The black press, for example, is generally supportive of the government, while the white press is more critical. However, the two sides agree that South Africa's problems are complex and cannot be solved overnight.

In this context, Carliss Spencer, a journalist from the United States, had an interview with Zwelin Sigul, a well-known African journalist, to discuss some of the key issues facing South Africa today.

Zwelink Sigul: The black press in South Africa is generally supportive of the government, but we are not blind to the problems. We are critical of the government when we think it is not doing enough.

Carliss Spencer: How do you think the government should respond to the anti-apartheid movement?

Zwelink Sigul: The government should engage in meaningful dialogue with the anti-apartheid movement. It should also work towards a peaceful resolution of the conflict.

Carliss Spencer: What role do you think the United States government should play in the South African situation?

Zwelink Sigul: The United States government should support peace and reconciliation in South Africa. It should also provide economic assistance to help alleviate the poverty and unemployment.

Carliss Spencer: What do you think the future holds for South Africa?

Zwelink Sigul: The future of South Africa is uncertain. It depends on how the government and the international community respond to the challenges.

Carliss Spencer: Thank you for your time, Zwelink.

Zwelink Sigul: You're welcome.

Chaka melts wax at the Museum

by Tracy L. Smith Jr.

The loss of a life is not as simple as it sounds. It is a tragic event that forever changes the lives of those left behind. Chaka Khan's death was a shock to fans around the world, who mourned the loss of a musical icon.

Chaka Khan's career spanned over four decades, during which she achieved immense success and became a symbol of joy and hope for many. Her contributions to the music industry are immeasurable, and she will be remembered for her incredible voice and charismatic performances.

Chaka's music touched the lives of millions, and her legacy continues to inspire and uplift people. Despite the pain of her passing, her music will live on, and she will forever be remembered as a true giant in the music world.

Recseq's World

By Recose Walker

In this stratified, classified world of ours, it's not very unusual for two or three friends. For example: a car can be called an automobile, wheels, or a ride. And we interchange and vary these names to suit the occasion. We clearly understand variations of a myriad of names and terms. But that's where the problem lies: Howards have a unique, creative way of saying the same thing using different names, which heightens the confusion.

Not only is Howard University renowned as being the mecca of "black" education, but we are also "infamous" for our social life. In other words, a large number of Howardians, as our social diet, imbibe alcoholic beverages (but most of us just drink), and those who don't drink it, forever it and . The results, but you weren't gonna say we got drunk. You see, Howards don't get drunk.

According to my survey, we get:

- picked
- totalled
- shocked

When you got all of those choices to choose from, who needs or wants to get drunk?

And like it or not, some people smoke. A few smoke cigarettes, and a few again (but again, again, again, again) who smoke cigarettes. The lapser person might call it marijuana, but here at Howard, we have

- marijuana
- hemp
- coke
- fire

Caribbean play on Campus:

New Play depicts plight of Women

by Rick Williams

The University of the Virgin Islands' production of "NO POSSESSION-NO OPPRESSION," directed by Patrick Hyman, was presented for the first time on the mainstage of the UVI Performing Arts Center on April 13. The play, written by a university student, explores the issues of possession and oppression within the Caribbean culture.

The play tells the story of a woman who is forced to struggle between her traditional values and her desire for freedom. She is trapped in a relationship with a man who constantly asserts his control over her, and she must find the strength to break free from his grasp.

The play is a powerful representation of the struggles faced by women in the Caribbean, and it serves as a reminder of the importance of empowering ourselves and standing up for our rights.

The Lost Art of Wining And Dining

by Robert A. Edwards

Most of us have been under the impression that the way a young lady goes to a young man's place is referred to as "wining and dining." But in fact, the term "wining and dining" is a misnomer.

When Howardians think of "wining and dining," they usually picture a scene at a college football game, where the students are enjoying the festivities and the atmosphere.

But what many people don't realize is that the term "wining and dining" actually comes from a more significant event: the end of the Civil War.

During the Reconstruction period, African Americans faced many challenges, including the struggle for political rights and economic opportunities. This period of uncertainty and change was a time of experimentation and innovation, as people sought to find new ways to build a better future.

In this context, "wining and dining" became a metaphor for the act of coming together to socialize and celebrate, to forge new bonds and to strengthen old ones. It was a way to honor the sacrifices of those who had fought for freedom and to build a brighter future for all.

Today, "wining and dining" continues to be a cherished tradition at Howard University, as students come together to enjoy food, drink, and each other's company. Whether it's a formal dinner or a casual gathering, "wining and dining" is a way to strengthen community, to build relationships, and to celebrate the many diverse cultures that make up the Howard community.
FASHION NOTES

Harriette Cole

Spring in winter? Sounds ludicrous, doesn’t it? Actually, the scenic in the fashion industry that looks like this is the reason for dress season to start late, according to designer Harriette Cole. Paris and Milan wait patiently by the warmth of their fireplaces while the rest of the states and Canada experience months of driving in the cold.

One, more than a month, Washington, D.C., and more specifically, Maryland, is kicking off another season of jackets and coats designed by Harriette Cole and her spring lines. Among the designs, we find a collection of dresses, blouses, skirts, and sweaters. The clothes are all made from high-quality fabrics and are available at Harriette Cole’s store, 118 West Houston St.

Under the tagline “Elegance Never Goes Out of Style,” the store offers a wide range of clothing for women, men, and children. The store is open Monday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. and Sunday from noon to 5 p.m. Free parking is available on the street.

Houston’s
A Neat place to eat

by Michelle Alexander

Houston’s, one of the nation’s well-known chain restaurants, has made Houston his home since 1984. Located on 25th Street and Texas Avenue, Houston’s is known for its classic all-American food, especially steak and prime rib. The restaurant is open for lunch and dinner daily.

Houston’s offers a variety of dishes, including prime rib, steak, and chicken breast. The prime rib is said to be the best in the city, and the steak is cooked to perfection. Houston’s also offers a selection of salads and sandwiches, as well as a wide variety of sides. The restaurant is known for its warm and friendly atmosphere, making it a popular spot for friends and family.

Houston’s is open for lunch from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. and dinner from 5 p.m. to 10 p.m. on Monday through Thursday, and from 5 p.m. to 10:30 p.m. on Friday and Saturday. The restaurant is closed on Sunday.

The Night Creatures

As the engine started, their backs became visible, the driver deliberately turned over the dashboard. The three creatures, each with plumed heads and long, thin tails, observed the driver’s actions. One of them turned to the woman, who was seated in the passenger seat, and said, “We’ve lost!”

The woman looked at the driver, who was still seated in the driver’s seat. “How can you say that?” she asked, her voice quivering with fear.

The driver turned to the woman. “We’re lost,” he said, his voice low and steady. “We’ve lost the trail.”

“T’ve never seen anything like this before,” the woman replied, her voice shaking.

“I know,” the driver said, his voice calm and collected. “But we’re going to get through this.”

The woman nodded, tears streaming down her cheeks. “I’m glad you said that,” she said, her voice breaking.

The driver turned back to the road, his face set in determination. “We’ll find our way through this,” he said, his voice steady and strong.

The woman nodded, tears streaming down her cheeks. “I’m glad you said that,” she said, her voice breaking.

The driver turned back to the road, his face set in determination. “We’ll find our way through this,” he said, his voice steady and strong.

The night creatures, each with plumed heads and long, thin tails, observed the driver’s actions. One of them turned to the woman, who was seated in the passenger seat, and said, “We’ve lost!”

The woman looked at the driver, who was still seated in the driver’s seat. “How can you say that?” she asked, her voice quivering with fear.

The driver turned to the woman. “We’re lost,” he said, his voice low and steady. “We’ve lost the trail.”

“T’ve never seen anything like this before,” the woman replied, her voice shaking.

“I know,” the driver said, his voice calm and collected. “But we’re going to get through this.”

The woman nodded, tears streaming down her cheeks. “I’m glad you said that,” she said, her voice breaking.
