Charlottesville was named by Robert McFarland for her beauty and grace. She was born into a family of scholars, and her education began at a young age. However, her life was cut short when she was killed in a tragic accident. Since then, her spirit has been remembered through The Hilltop, a publication that continues to honor her legacy.

CHARTER DAY
March 2

Trey Smith Jr.
Hilltop Staff Writer

Charlottesville Day 1983 will commemorate the University of Howard’s chartering as a university, and the second annual Charter Day will take place on March 2, 1983. The event will feature speeches, performances, and a charter dinner.

The Hilltop will publish special content leading up to and following the celebration, including interviews with students, faculty, and alumni. Look out for updates in upcoming issues of The Hilltop.

The Struggle Continues

By Pierre L. Evard

Thehilltop.org

Howard University has made some progress in its efforts to establish a new School of Communications. The school was approved by the Faculty of the School of Communications, and its establishment is expected to be complete by the end of the academic year.

The new School of Communications will be housed in the Northside building, which was formerly used as a dormitory. The building has undergone extensive renovations and will be ready for use in the fall.

The school will offer undergraduate and graduate degree programs in communications, including majors in journalism, public relations, and broadcasting.

In addition to the new School of Communications, Howard University has made progress in its efforts to establish a new School of Law. The school was approved by the Faculty of the School of Law, and its establishment is expected to be complete by the end of the academic year.

The new School of Law will be housed in the Southside building, which was formerly used as a dormitory. The building has undergone extensive renovations and will be ready for use in the fall.

The school will offer undergraduate and graduate degree programs in law, including majors in constitutional law, tort law, and property law.

The Hilltop will publish special content leading up to and following the establishment of these new schools, including interviews with students, faculty, and alumni. Look out for updates in upcoming issues of The Hilltop.

Hilltop is a quality newspaper on campus. In this issue, we have a special section on the responsibilities of Black communicators. The issue also features articles on the role of Black communicators in the media and the need for more Black-owned and community-owned media.

The next issue will be released on March 15, 1983, and will feature articles on the importance of community service in education, the role of technology in education, and the need for more Black-owned and community-owned media.

Hilltop editor, Evelyn Hill, has been working hard to improve the quality of the newspaper. She has also been working to ensure that the newspaper is accessible to all students, regardless of their background.

In the meantime, we encourage you to support your local newspapers and to consider supporting Hilltop as well.
Jobs For The 1980's
By Tracy Adity
Hillery Waldron

Daily, many of us—especially young women, see each other classified as "Help Wanted" in the classified pages of the morning newspaper. However, the most sought-after job—work at home—will be the hot item of the future. "Help Wanted: Housewife" is likely to be the most common job entry.

According to experts from TELICIA, a Linear-oriented company, an increasing number of companies are offering work-at-home opportunities. Since 1985, the number of women was up by 10 percent, says Carroll.

Condey explained that a variety of na-chance to work has increased. These mar-time products are now in the hands of the people. Therefore, the potential for growth in the future is enormous. "We are seeing more and more women entering the job field, especially in the lower paid positions," he added.

Condey stated that the demand for home based work is increasing. "We are now seeing a trend towards more women working from home, especially in the female-dominated fields," he said.

According to Carroll, the need for home-based work is expected to continue to increase in the future.

Condey also explained that the work opportunities are increasing in number of positions available. "We are beginning to see a shift in the types of positions available, with more openings in the lower paid fields," he said.

Condey noted that the demand for Justice Dept. Attacked On Civil Rights Record

In light of the mounting civil rights activities in the South, the U.S. Justice Department Civil Rights Division is being assailed from several angles. The Southern Courier, a prominent civil rights advocate, has recently criticized the Department for its alleged inaction in the face of growing civil rights activism. The Southern Courier's editor, Ms. Jane Smith, has accused the Department of turning a blind eye to the mounting number of civil rights violations that are occurring across the South.

Ms. Smith's accusations are not without merit. Recent reports indicate that the Department has been slow in responding to the growing civil rights activism. The Department's failure to address these violations has led to a growing sense of frustration among civil rights activists.

In a statement, Ms. Smith said, "The Department's inaction is criminal. They are allowing the rights of African Americans to be violated with impunity. The Department must take action to protect the rights of all Americans, and not just those who happen to live in the South."

Another civil rights activist, Mr. John Doe, echoed Ms. Smith's sentiments, saying, "The Department's failure to address these violations is putting the lives of innocent people at risk. The Department must act now to protect the rights of all Americans."

In response to these allegations, the Department has stated that it is committed to upholding the Constitution and ensuring the protection of civil rights for all Americans. The Department has also stated that it is working diligently to address the growing civil rights activism.

In conclusion, it is clear that the Department must take action to address the growing civil rights activism. The Department's failure to act has led to a growing sense of frustration among civil rights activists. The Department must act now to protect the rights of all Americans.

Reflections: the First Coup in Ghana

February 24, 1966:

By Richard W. Minter

In the preceding decade of February 24, 1966, an annual issue of Radio Eugene, Oregon, published a special anniversary publication, which included an article by an unknown author. The article was not broadcast on the radio, but was later included in a book published by the same author. The book was titled "Reflections: the First Coup in Ghana" and was published in 1966.

By 1966, an unusual event had taken place in Ghana, which was the first coup in the history of the country. This coup was led by a group of military officers who overthrew the government of Dr. Kwame Nkrumah, the first President of Ghana.

The coup was carried out by a group of officers who had been trained in the United States and who were dissatisfied with the direction of Nkrumah's government. They believed that Nkrumah was becoming too authoritarian and was overspending public funds on grandiose projects.

After the coup, a new government was established under the leadership of General Woima, who was a member of the coup group. The new government was characterized by a strong emphasis on economic development and industrialization.

The coup had important implications for the future of Ghana and the region as a whole. It marked the beginning of a period of political instability and economic hardship in Ghana, which lasted for several years.

Dr. Kwame Nkrumah himself was arrested in his home by the new regime, and was subsequently exiled to the United States. He later returned to Ghana and continued to play an active role in the country's politics, but his influence was greatly diminished after the coup.

Despite the political turmoil, Ghana continued to make progress in areas such as education and infrastructure. The country's economy also grew rapidly during this period, with the help of foreign aid and investment.

In conclusion, the First Coup in Ghana was a significant event in the country's history, which had far-reaching implications for the region and the world. It marked the beginning of a period of political instability and economic hardship in Ghana, but also laid the foundation for the country's future development.

Affairs in Brief

Khartoum (UPI) - Sudan's President Jaafar Nuur, after meeting with Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak last Tuesday declared that his country has no territorial claims with South Sudan.
Mubarak's one-day trip to Khartoum was to discuss a policy program that could lead to an eventual amalgamation between the two African nations.

It is in the interest of both countries to remain united in order to achieve peace in the region, he said.

="Hilltop" by Michelle Alexander

"Hilltop" is a soulful rendition of "Hilltop" by Howard's China Inn, performed by Michelle Alexander. It's a powerful song that speaks to the beauty and resilience of Howard University and its students.

="Accent Ghana"

"Accent Ghana" is a collaborative piece between Howard's Jazz Ensemble and the African Heritage Dance Ensemble. It's a visually stunning and culturally rich performance that celebrates the rich heritage of Ghana.

="The Hilltop" by Howard's China Inn

"The Hilltop" is a vibrant and dynamic performance that showcases the talent and diversity of Howard University. It's a perfect way to celebrate the university's 25th anniversary and to honor the legacy of its students.
We all enter into a similar stage of metamorphosis with the dawning of spring. If you're without a date on which to make your hair do a spring fling, we have a styler who can help you out. Of course, when you're thinking of the dawning of spring, you immediately think of the fishes in the ocean, because they start to produce sperm and eggs in the spring. But you also think of other phenomena that happen in the spring. If you've been holding your breath all winter, the fish will come out to breathe. And after the sun goes down, you know there will be some other phenomena that will happen. Probably all winter you have been holding your breath while you have been waiting for spring to arrive. Probably all winter you have been waiting for spring to arrive. Probably all winter you have been waiting for spring to arrive.
