FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH RECORDS
Collection 35-1

Prepared & Revised by:
Wilda D. Logan
June 1980

Scope Note

The members of the First Congregational Church of Washington, D.C. Were largely responsible for the founding of Howard University in 1867. Of the seventeen original incorporators of the bill which established the Howard University, fourteen belonged to the First Congregational church including Gen. Oliver Otis Howard, for whom the University was named.

The Church has a history of liberal policies on segregation and for many years it was the only place in Washington where Howard University was allowed to hold its commencement services.

The First Congregational Church was very influential. Before the original building was built, the Congregation used to hold services and meetings in the U.S. House of Representatives, probably due to the influence of its first pastor, Dr. Charles B. Boynton, who was also the chaplain to the House of Representatives.

The collection includes seventeen items, spans one-half linear foot. The records date from 1865 to 1870, and include addresses and sermons, official documents such as the by-laws, resolutions and programs. Of particular interest is a holographic resolution concerning the attitude of the church relative to the admission of colored members. There are two newspaper clippings relating interesting history of the church.
