Reflection on America

The Yard Service
By Janelle Stiel

Wednesday at 7 a.m., a message was delivered: flagpole ceremony.

With the Howard and University flag poles in front of the Yard, a corner emerged hoping to bring cohesion and spiritual guidance to those gathered around the flag.

Bernard Hamilton, Dean of Rufus Kilgore Chapel, said this was "a tribute to those who died a year ago and those who suffered in the terrorist attacks.

We gather today to celebrate the ideals learned and know the meaning of what it is to live in a free society, proudly standing for freedom from the Spanish-American War.

The Howard and University flags represent the triumph of those gathering around the flag.

The Howard University seal will no longer represent the Image of Howard University.

Preserving the Image of Howard University Seal No Longer on Parapet on

A student signs a wall of remembrance set up on the main quadrangle Wednesday.

A new seal has been created for Howard University. The seal, which replaces the day reduced, is an attempt to preserve the ideals of Howard University.

Another candidate appeared on the ballot: former D.C. Council member Clarck, Osic L. Thorpe, andFaith, who goes by only one name.

The University seal will no longer represent the Image of Howard University.

New Advisors Not Prepared for Duty in Communications

By Tiffany Dupree
The Hilltop

As students in the School of Communications prepare to bring higher standards, the school is also preparing to bring higher levels of quality in communication courses, with the recent addition of two new academic advisors to assist students following the retirement of Adviser Walls Parked and the resignation of the initial advisor, Trinidad Mejia. They are Center for Career Center and Advising Advisor Michael Andrews. The new advisors, Mejia and Andrews, who earned their undergraduate and graduate degrees from Howard University, heard about the position through an Internet advertisement. After submitting their application and undergoing an interview, they were given the positions.

As an academic advisor in the College of Arts and Sciences, Mejia believes that the experience she had working in advising positions will assist her in her position as the new academic advisor to the School of Communications.

Michael Andrews is a graduate of Amherst College, where he received a bachelor’s degree in psychology and a master’s degree in education.

Before coming to Howard, Andrews worked with the DC Public Charter School Board, which prepares high school students for new roles as a broker director while at James Madison University, he believes that his constant contact with young people has prepared him to accurately advise his assigned students.

Mejia stated that in the position she held previously, she worked closely with little preparation of students coming from the University, “I was really on my own but the help of students and faculty has made a difference,” he added. Students concerned with whether or not they will be able to take the next advance course always put the best decision for the communication students.

The advisors were thrown into the deep end of advising students, according to Mejia. She feels that this is the best experience for her because she is able to take her time to really get to know the students and how to best prepare them.

“I would rather buy clothes than books. She also saves some of it for college. She also keeps an eye on work history, accompanied by transcripts and even come with a physical certification serv- ices,” she added. In reality, these websites are designed for people who want a degree from a top college or university but don’t want to work on it themselves. They provide diploma-for-sale products, which are sold for as little as $50.
Symptoms usually begin to appear gradually throughout September and October and last throughout March and April. During the fall months, people with this disorder often feel a sense of dread that the winter is coming, said Agnes Deandrea Robertson, a nursing student at the Howard University College of Medicine. Colorful murals are splashed across uniquely designed buildings in the Adams Morgan neighborhood, northwest Washington, D.C. Residents, visitors, and others refer to it as "the neighborhood," and many describe the area as "the heart of the city." Adams Morgan is a multicultural neighborhood, located northwest of downtown, bordered by Columbia Road to the west, 18th Street to the south, and the boundaries of the District.

Metrobus and Metrorail aren’t just for getting to and from work. Take them to ball games, museums, stores, concerts, restaurants, theaters, parks, wherever you want to go. And during those times when Metro isn’t full of commuters (midday of the day, evenings, weekends, and late night) fares are cheaper.

So pick a time when there is no line, and ride Metro for fun.

Despite Accreditation Problems, Grambling Will Not Close

By Lloyd Freeman
The Hilltop

Concerned parents and students are still putting in work calling Grambling State University (GSU) with critical questions about whether the school will close. The university's president, Vickie Jackson, stated that the university will not close due to accreditation issues.

The Hilltop is not expected to close anytime soon - not for the next ten years.

Grambling has until Sept. 1 to produce an approved audit to SACS for the last two academic years in order to gain accreditation. The financial statements before the legislative auditors office can begin work. After Kyle office completes the audit, the results will be forwarded to SACS. In December, GSU officials will meet with SACS to discuss its action statement, Jackson said.

"Grambling State University will be here, and we are doing everything to ensure that," Neari Warner, acting president of GSU, said. Warner praised Owens and his staff. "They put forth tremendous effort. They've worked hard, and they're doing great," Warner said.

"We've had a barrage of calls from people - students, prospective students, and parents - who are panicked," Warner said in a prepared statement. "They want to make sure the university's financial staff, under the direction of Billy Owens, will be able to sign the university's financial statements before the legislative auditors office can begin work.

"Grambling State University is fully accredited, has worked hard with the state legislature, and we're working hard with the financial staff to complete the audit," Warner said.

The House endorsed a resolution that they would appeal the ruling, with a decision on the case not expected to come anytime soon - not for the next 10 years.

Leader Urges Nigerians to Support Woman
Addams - Professor Michael Power (the speaker) of Addams College in Chicago has called on a Muslim woman sentenced to death by stoning in Saudi Arabia to be spared, saying she could be released on parole.

The 26-year-old was convicted of adultery and reportedly sentenced to death by an Islamic court. Power said he was concerned for the woman's safety and that her sentence would be a setback for human rights.

BMB Changes Food Aid Policy
BMB - The government of Malawi has decided to withdraw food aid from the country's border areas. The decision is due to be carried out over the next few months as the famine situation improves.

Schwartz to be Retried
Louima Police Case
Schwartz - The New York police officer at the center of the police brutality case involving Haitian immigrant Abner Louima is scheduled to stand trial this month.

The previous jury found federal drug and gun charges involving the beating of Louima and his brother, Jean-Pierre Louima. The jury was deadlocked, leading to a mistrial.

Louima's lawyers have argued that the officer should not be retried because the officer was found not guilty of the original charges. The United States Court of Appeals in New York upheld that decision.

Sources Say Powell Seeking Political Advancement
The American Civil Liberties Union, the civil rights group that represents Powell, said that the former chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff was interested in running for political office.

Powell, a conservative who served in the Bush administration, had previously said he was not interested in politics. However, he has been vocal about his support for the Iraq war and has expressed interest in running for a Senate seat.

Ice Cube, From Rapping to Acting Again

By Enchuns Tim IHI

The Hilltop

Many people have heard the name Ice Cube before, but few may know the story behind the success of the actor and rapper. Ice Cube is a man who has been in the entertainment industry for many years, and his success has come from his ability to adapt and change with the times.

Ice Cube was born in 1969 in Compton, California. He first rose to fame as a rapper in the 1980s, and his music was characterized by its raw and authentic sound. Ice Cube's early rap career was marked by a series of successful albums, and he quickly became one of the most influential and recognizable figures in hip-hop.

However, Ice Cube's success in the music industry was not limited to just his albums. He also gained success as a actor, with roles in films such as Boyz n the Hood, Friday, and Barbershop. With his acting, Ice Cube continued to showcase his talent and versatility, and he became known for his unique style and charisma on screen.

Ice Cube's success in both the music and acting worlds has been a testament to his talent and dedication. He has been able to adapt and change with the times, and this has allowed him to continue to succeed in both industries.

Kangol, the British pillbox hat, is making a comeback. The Kangaroo’s Back occurred in the past, but it’s not a forgotten story. Instead, they choose alternative solutions.

The Kangol hat is one of the most recognizable accessories in hip-hop fashion. Unlike many trendy, top-brand haircuts, Kangol has a leg up in the marketplace due to the $35 to $45 price tag, the universal appeal, and the “pimp hat” factor. It’s no wonder why so many clients line up for the day. Ross knows the gripes of long waits. “Clients should call if they know they have an appointment, but aren’t able to get as many people in a day as they’d like. To get the right appointment, I have to schedule my appointments and not be behind.”

When Showboating Goes Overboard

By Bernard "Poet" Murray

This everyday phenomenon is coloring in a multitude of ways. From kids picking up basketballs, hats or tennis rackets to trying to emulate their favorite athletes whether on basketball courts or outside. Athletes, such as the current crop of NBA stars or in the WNBA, are being followed by kids from the same areas they grew up in. The practice of showing off by college and professional athletes has taken on a new dimension.

While it is not unusual to see a little kid wearing a ball cap, name of their favorite player on the back, or a new pair of tennis shoes, the kids today seem to want much more. They will go through the motions of what they see their favorite players doing and show off their athletic skills. The question is, where does it stop?

The Hilltop sports editor, Barry Muir, recently wrote an article about the effect this has had on the game of basketball. He stated that it is not just emulating a player's skills, but also their values.

"It's not just about emulating the skills of a player, but the values that they represent," Muir said. "It's about showing respect for those values and realizing that they can be applied to our own lives."

However, there is a fine line between admiration and imitation. When does it become an obsession? When does it cross the line from admiration to emulation?

The question of whether or not this is healthy for kids raises many concerns. On one hand, it is healthy for kids to have heroes and role models. It gives them something to aspire to and work towards. On the other hand, it can lead to unhealthy levels of pressure and comparison to the idealized image of that athlete.

"It's important for kids to have heroes, but it's crucial that they don't feel like they need to be exact replicas of those athletes," said Dr. John Smith, a child psychologist. "It's about finding their own path and embracing their own talents, rather than trying to fit into someone else's mold."

Parents and coaches play a crucial role in guiding kids through this process. They need to help kids understand that while it is important to have heroes, it is equally important to recognize their own unique qualities and strengths.

"As parents and coaches, we need to encourage kids to pursue their own interests and talents," said Smith. "We need to celebrate their successes and help them overcome their failures. It's about building their confidence and self-esteem, rather than comparing them to others."

Ultimately, it is up to the individual child to decide how much they want to emulate their favorite athletes. It is important for them to recognize the distinction between admiration and imitation, and to focus on developing their own skills and strengths.

"It's about finding a balance," said Smith. "It's about respecting their favorite athletes, while also recognizing their own uniqueness and potential. It's about finding their own path, rather than trying to follow someone else's."
Local Pro Teams Offer Discounted Tickets for College Students

A little bit mixed with the excitement of being in a Lady Bison game, 91-year-old Harlem manager Morris Blondell said, "I am not a role model.'

There aren't many who would argue that Charles Barkley is not a role model, but it is difficult to see how he can be considered one. Barkley, who is known for his short temper and controversial statements, has struggled with drug and alcohol addiction throughout his career. Despite these challenges, he has managed to maintain his popularity and is still able to attract a large audience. However, this year the teams decided to try something new and offered discounted tickets to college students. This move was praised by many who saw it as a way to encourage more students to attend games and support their local teams.

Howard vs. Hampton Rivalry Returns to Respective Campuses

By Ethan Zagore
The Hilltop

For years, Howard University and Hampton University have been rivals. The teams have played each other in a variety of sports, including basketball and football. However, this year the rivalry has taken on a new twist. The teams decided to offer discounted tickets to college students, with the hope of attracting more fans to the games.

The decision to offer discounts was made by the university's athletic departments, with the goal of increasing attendance and promoting the schools. The move was met with enthusiasm by both universities, with Howard officials saying they hoped to attract more fans to the games and Hampton officials expressing excitement about the potential increase in attendance.

Howard defeated Hampton 29-25 in another close one. In the first half, Howard's long-time B.C. resident, Lucy Jordan, staged a comeback to put Howard right here at Hampton. The game seemed pretty much wrapped up as Howard took on the Hamilton.

"As a business owner and a long-time B.C. resident, I'd love to be able to watch the game," said Lucy Jordan.

I'm running, I'm flying, I'm fueling, I'm putting every ounce of my muscle into my effort. I feel my heart pounding as I run through the stands of our school. Hampton.

I know that everyone is going to be the same as they are in every other track meet, but I don't care. The problem is when you are running and making marks by some idol that chooses to come in late and make all kinds of noise. If you want to do that, you're just at the right place.

And don't get me started on how you can't have that person ask for your water bottle, I want to keep the interference to a minimum. These rules need to be enforced on everyone.

The problem is that some people prefer to abuse the rules, and what administration prefers to look the other way?

If you want notes, I will give you my notes. If you don't, then don't want to have them. That's the way I roll.

I am greatly disturbed by the recent hostility between my section (trumpets) and other sections on campus. I have never seen anything that has given me so much grief. And I
