Howard buys Wonder Plaza for $18.3 million

By Alfre Davis
Hilltop Staff Writer

As part of a campus-wide 900 million reservation plan, Howard University has pur-bought the Wonder Plaza. The University plans to move on-campus services into the building.

The Wonder Plaza, located at 2301
Georgia Avenue, 2216th St. and 2506 South Street was purchased from Douglas Jaf-1 as a ten-acre house in an expensive businness and bookstore. The Wonder Plaza, which is part of the university's computer center operations, and the International Affairs Center, said Jonathan J. Fletcher, the Vice president for business and financial operations and chief financial officer.

According to Fletcher, Howard has been looking for some time to increase the space for the computer center operations as well as to exand other service offices on campus. As part of the University's master plan, the Wonder Plaza project's cost would be $18.3 million.

"They (computer center operations) do not have the space to adequately do their jobs," Fletcher said.

Regardless of the current appropriation, Howard University had to purchase the Wonder Plaza. The university was not able to build a new facility.

The $18.3 million deal was completed
Monday. The final details will be released later this week.

"This purchase represents a major step in the continuing investment by the university in providing first class facilities for its students, faculty and administrative functions. We are very pleased to have this property as a part of the full range of facilities that the university offers its students, faculty, staff and for the community," President Franklin G. J. Ross said in a press release.

"It's (the bookstores) convention center
now because it is in the heart of the district.
There is so much traffic on Georgia Avenue. There's so much confusion," Fletcher said.

The bookstores also plan to offer a "diversified" book and the campus store.

"We also plan to make the bookstore and the campus store a place to meet, and with the current situation, you may as well mix all the ways into one space," Fletcher said.

Howard University has been the Mecca for African American students living at the same downtown. It's time to make Howard University Student a different way they want to lead people into the city," said Daryn Benard, Chairman of the Board of Directors.

"I Have A Dream Speech

"I am happy to join with you today in what will go down in history as the greatest demonstration of the power of human will ever to be shown on the face of the earth.

I say to you today that these mighty forces can move mountains. They can create new worlds. There is nothing too hard for them.

When I say to you today that these mighty forces can

This purchase was the first move of the National Bank. The terms in the agreement require a down payment. The first year's payment will be $2 million.

In the transaction, Howard will acquire the entire property on the second and third floors and also the rental properties on the first floor.

These businesses include: Kentucky Fried Chicken, Pepsi, the Wiz, Kennerly's Pizza, and Chick-fil-A.

There is also a parking lot behind the building with a capacity of 150 spaces. It has not yet been decided how these spaces will be distributed.

"It would be a lot more convenient," said Dr. Steve A. Fawcett, vice president for student services. The bookstore would have the same hours as Wonder Plaza. Students could purchase books seven days a week.

For some Howard students, the move would be an inconvenience,

"It's (the bookstores) convention center

"We have no notice of 1 problems today.

"I have a feeling about how people are going to respond to the new season.

Summit set to fight international surcharge

By Kimberly Bryant
Hilltop Staff Writer

Their city can be heard all over Howard University, as students and faculty are encouraging everyone to "say your voice and end the discrimination against students." Students are organizing weekly protests against the student fee surcharge.

The Department of Education recom-manded the surcharge on the basis that American students must not be made to subscribe to international students.

The objective of the student fee surcharge is to raise money for the University's National Bank. The terms in the agreement require a down payment. The first year's payment will be $2 million.

In the transaction, Howard will acquire

Students angered by advanced phone payments

By Malorie Hunter
Hilltop Staff Writer

Revisions made to the Howard University Student Telecommunications Office, now in its second year of operation, have students grumbling with frustration.

In the pilot program, students were billed just as in previous years, but the Telecommunications Office has changed the payment plan and this year the monthly local charges are combined to produce a one-time fee.

"We just want a bill at the end of the month, just like we always did," said one student.

Under the new plan, phone service fees, which have traditionally been billed in the monthly local charges, are now placed into a one-time fee for students.

"I can't believe how much this cost," said one student, adding that the fee is about $30 for the month.

The fee is calculated based on the number of occupants per dorm room and must be paid prior to receiving phone service.

Shooting on campus raises question of security

By Melissa J. Jones
Hilltop Staff Writer

Howard University's campus again saw one of its shooting incidents in the last two months, prompting University security to call for new safety measures in light of recent incidents.

According to University security, the shooting occurred on the Engineering Campus, but the exact location is still unknown.

"We are still investigating the incident. It appears to be a random act of violence," said University security spokesperson.

Currently, there are no plans to install additional security measures on the campus.

Committee promises soul-filled & cultural homecoming events

Freshmen get their first taste of the Mecca

by Stephanie Traube
Walter E. Washington

The class of 1997 has joined the ranks of Howard University, and whether they are far from home, or just a short drive away, most freshmen have discovered that it is truly a new world.

It begins as a harmless late night pizza with your friends, a study-break bag of chips or a quick slice of pizza to tide you over until the next meal. Unfortunately, these seemingly harmless acts of consumption often result in the worst food. Freshman Stephanie Fields, who lives in Drew Hall, feels that it is a very common bond.

"Students...students...students" announced the Campus Pals during pre-orientation, had a different perspective on the registration process. The freshmen seemed about to cry with joy when they were called to an office, admitting to having heard stories of days spent in line waiting to be reassigned, while others still remained in the dormitory that was supposed to be closed for the 1993-94 academic year. Those who chose to be reassigned into housing would have to purchase a meal plan. For Areneaud Jones, the luckiest of seniors, to Slowe, Bethune, or Meridian Hill, those who chose to be reassigned into housing would have to purchase meal plans.

"University Hotel or Truth Hall," Burlington freshman, senior Joseph Falls, who is vice-chairman of the Campus Pals, said he was pleased with the spirit participation in pre-orientation, especially among the seniors. "It was like everybody was still on vacation," he explained. Abby's sentiments about the registration process.

"A little bit," he said. "I really didn't know what I was getting into.

Girls, though having gone through pre-orientation, had a different perspective on the registration process. "I really didn't know what I had to do," one said.

"I thought, get in line, play politics with the contestants and the audience in order to get the meal plan you want," another said. "It was a real epidemic for many college freshmen.

"You have to do certain things to earn that 'H,"' he said.

"But the registration is a real sense of accomplishment," Strickland commented.

"I expected the schools as a whole to be a combination of the highest quality education and the best physical plant," Baker said. "It was like being at home, but still at school." Abby's sentiments about the registration process.

"It was fine," she said. "I didn't have to stand in any line, just a little line to get to the window.

"While not a required event, Freshman 1997 is a very popular event for many college freshmen.

"I don't think you have to worry about eating because you always have options in the cafeteria once a day, but supplement yourself with take-out," another said.

A letter from the President

Each new academic year brings with it a new group of students who arrive on this campus eager to make the most of their Howard University experience. As student leaders, we are here to help you navigate the challenges you will face and to support you in your academic and personal growth.

As you join us in this profession, I extend a warm welcome and a bit of advice. We do not speak only on those who have graduated from this institution since 1940, but also on those who have graduated from Howard University. So, you are not alone as you make your way through the first-year of college life, I settle down, stay on track, and persue the intellectual stretch of microbiology. I can honestly say that my experiences as a student and as a professional in the field of microbiology will be of great value to you.

What are some of the ways you can make your stay here particularly meaningful and fulfilling?

First, open yourself to the Howard University experience. We extend to budding journalists, editors, and writers not only selecting courses in areas in which you perform well in the past, but also choose those who will enable you to expand your new areas of knowledge and skill. Do not wait for your teachers and instructors to provide you with the tools you need to succeed;

Second, be involved. Learning is not a passive process. You should be involved in the community; through the range of extracurricular activities Howard University has to offer. Take advantage of the opportunity to meet people from all over the land and find the Howard University experience for yourself. We hope you will find satisfaction and success.

Finally, don’t be afraid to ask for help. At many academic institutions, students are encouraged to seek assistance. The Howard University experience involves a high level of interaction and collaboration. We want you to succeed;

As you begin your journey, we encourage you to make the best of your opportunities. This is your medium.

What is Labor Day?

Dr. Marilyn Marable

The major challenges in revitalizing the democratic movement for democracy and social justice for America’s people is the forging of coherent coalitions across ethnic lines. The major priority here must be the building of unity between African-American and Latinos. Yet for various reasons since the late 1980s, this effort has been largely unsuccessful.

There are at least four critical issues which have fostered tension between Latino and African-American political leaders.

First, after the Census of 1990, Congressional Latinos were not re-appointed to have Latino or African-American minority representation. The writer, using a pseudonym, said that these tensions have been conflated by Latino leaders who had competed unsuccessfully for the recognition of a bilingual constituency.

Thus, on a major series of public issues — education, equality, housing, tax, jobs, civil rights enforcement and police, Latinos, African-Americans, and African-American Share a common set of interests. Common interest is what is the area of racial and cultural identity for the entire group. The Latin American or African-American community, in other words, has a common interest in producing and implementing policies that will benefit the entire.

Washington, D.C.,...
Guyanese President calls for medical help

By Ghislaine Michel
Hilltop Staff Writer

Begging for doctors and teachers to return to the country, President Dr. C. Chadid Jagan addressed a large gathering at Howard University's College of Medicine in Bel Sira.

Jagan said that his country could not compete with the high salary scales of the U.S. in recruiting Guyanese doctors. His plea was supported by Dr. Walter Howick, who, in his closing remarks, urged people to return "home" to help his land this year on a goodwill trip of doctors and nurses who would hold workshops and give medical aid to residents.

In Washington as part of a Caribbean delegation of medical professionals, Monday night to discuss cooperation between America and the Caribbeans. They discussed trade, investments, development of the region, immigration and illegal traffic.

(Also present at the forum were the Ambassador to Washington Dr. Edmard Edmard, and members of Dr. Jagan's staff who attended the meeting with him."

Jagan also told his countrymen and women, that were present at this address that they could establish foreign currency accounts in Guyana. He also mentioned that his government would soon be issuing development bonds of one hundred dollar denominations, which would be available to all Guyanese.

He also outlined some of the major problems that his government inherited from the People's National Congress on Oct. 5, 1990. Jagan said there was a total collapse of the economy. The country has the highest debt per capita in the Commonwealth, he said. Jagan said social programs and services are now down by more than 10 percent of the government's expenditures.

Therefore, he said, the government's basic objectives were to promote economic growth, to improve human resources, to ensure this wage rate at least keep pace with the level of inflation and to reduce a deficit standard of living to the Guyanese people.

So far his administration has cured infant mortality which was expected to be 9 percent but was only 2 percent at the first half of the year. Projections are that inflation will be between 5 and 6 percent.

Jagan stressed that the government could not change the country's economy alone, but he expressed confidence in senior, especially Guyanese and other Caribbean nationals.

He urged those who attended the meeting to refrain from labeling him or his government according to their prejudices but to instead judge him for his acts.

Communication is key to harmonious living

By Tori Watson

Living with someone is not always easy. We cannot assume that because everyone on a "Different World" got along with their roommates, we will all be able to do it. What requires the most work is that requires a lot of work.

For that reason, the Howard experience has been designed to help students and professionals to find the right social diversity in the ideal body.

Students coming from more than 110 countries outside the United States bring with them differences just like the students coming from the 50 states in America. Learning to live harmoniously with students having different differences, being open-minded, and being able to make living much more pleasant, as these differences are sorted out.

And like Moses had the Commandments, there are 10 rules to living with someone.

Rule One: Respect your roommate's home. If you show respect for the roommates who you get, you talk to, it will get back to him or her.

Rule Two: Be considerate. If your roommate is studying for an important exam, don't play your stereo full volume.

Rule Three: Communicate. Communication is the key to all problems. "My roommate and I never talked," said Terri M. Jones, a senior majoring in English. "Then one day, she got into a warranting match.

Rule Four: Be open and honest. If you aren't honest with each other, how do you expect to live with this person? How are you going to make decisions? Discuss openly and honestly on many topics in a very safe environment.

Rule Five: Don't talk about your roommate's house guests. If you say anything about your roommate, no matter what he tells you, it will get back to him or her.

Rule Six: Set rules. This may not always work, but some have found that if they lay rules down for the additional things in the beginning, the relationship is better. For instance, who should take out the garbage, and the bathroom and living room are things that need to be worked out from the beginning. House meetings can help solve these problems.

Rule Seven: Don't have an agenda. A roommate may talk about his and your roommate's plans. Discuss your problem with him and let him take care of the taboos.

Rule Eight: Don't immediately judge your roommate's lifestyle. Just because the girl is born in the U.S. does not mean that she doesn't like to do things together. Think of it as going out to eat. Now, you go to the restaurant and choose what you eat.

Rule Nine: Don't treat your roommate's house guests like your own. If you say anything to your roommate, no matter what he tells you, it will get back to him or her.

Rule Ten: Don't be too critical. This living situation is does not always make your roommate do things. For instance, having your roommate do things does not always work, but some have found that if they lay rules down for the additional things in the beginning, the relationship is better. For instance, who should take out the garbage, and the bathroom and living room are things that need to be worked out from the beginning. House meetings can help solve these problems.

Kente cloth exhibited

In his book, "How Europe Discovered Africa," Guyanese historian Dr. Walter Rodney highlighted the extent to which colonialism set back the development of the African continent, especially on the African west coast. This summer, the Howard community was given a chance to help revive the fabric and garment industries, especially on the African west coast. "The practical demonstration of the traditional kente has been the most wonderful experience for me, and also the number of people who attended daily to see the wonderful, creative, and talented ones," Goba said.

I spent my night, tossing and turning, at least three Howard University students will never forget.

Before they met their summer loves, they were in those days in the searching heat, drenched with sweat at the worst of their ordeals. They spent their nights tossing and turning, fantasizing about romantic and unforgettable romances.

Once they finally succumbed to their desires and opened up against adventure, they had to live them.

The summer of 1993 will go down in history as a summer that at least three Howard University students will never forget.

"Without him by my side, I felt incomplete," said one of her former lovers. "I don't think I ever really felt complete with any other guy."

"I was lonely without my boyfriend," a woman said. "I was constantly trying to find something or someone to fill the void," she said.

"I felt of sitting around the house feeling sorry for myself," a man said. "I decided to make the best of the situation and have the fun I couldn't have last year due to the situation." He added that distance should not really be a reason to break up.

Sharon found solace in not one, but two former lovers. "Sometimes, I had to lie to Eric and tell him I was busy, when I was really going out with Mike. One day, I went out with all three; I was so tired when I got home that I fell asleep in my clothes," she jokingly remembered.

"I'll never expect us to go in a relationship all year and then go out on a date, she reluctantly said." You have to do it right. Triple it!"

"It was 1963 and that was the year the race was, living in the place I lived in," a woman said. "It was 1963 and that was the year I participated in the 1963 March on Washington and marched to the White House."

Dr. Thomas Wessel said that varying degrees of sunlight affect people. He added that doctors should not really be a factor in summer romance, but that it does, somehow, have a psychological effect on people.

"It is common for people to get involved in short-term flings when they are away during summer break," a woman said. "It is good to take a break and that's not going anywhere," he said.

Dr. Wessel was uncertain of what I did, Sharon thought, maybe, when I came home for Thanksgiving and Christmas. I'll go back. They are supposed to be a lot of fun, especially for my friends."

"I was never expected us to go in a relationship all year and then go out on a date," she reluctantly said." You have to do it right. Triple it!"

"I was physically ill by her side to ride."

THE OTHER WOMAN

What Monique Tells "Time that Julian, she was not sure that she had been treated fairly. But I guess, in a way, that every man cheats. I'll never know what I did," Sharon concluded.

"I never had any intentions of telling Daniel about what hap­pened this summer. She is convinced that what he did was not my fault."

"I feel no sense of guilt for what I did because I believe that every man cheats. I never felt complete with any other guy."

"I was fortunate to have been the age I was. I was very fortunate to have been the age I was."

Black journalists mourn death of pioneer, legend

Oakland Tribune owner/publisher inspired more than just news

Dr. Minna J. Campbell
Health Staff Writer

He had an unforgettable face — bright and cheerful, his smile leaped from ear to ear. His eyes revealed a boyish innocence. The man behind the face was no less remarkable.

Robert C. Maynard, founder and publisher of the Oakland Tribune and the first African-American to own and publish a daily newspaper in the United States, died after a six year battle with prostate cancer on Tuesday, Aug. 17.

Born in Brooklyn, N.Y., Maynard's interest in journalism was sparked when, as a young boy, he wrote an essay on the new wave of immigration taking place in his neighborhood.

At the age of 16, he dropped out of high school to work for The New York Age, a new black weekly. All 19 of his siblings graduated from college.

In 1939, Maynard bought the Oakland Tribune, the first black-owned newspaper in the United States. After assuming the editor and publisher positions, he turned the newspaper, which had once been labeled one of the worst newspapers in the United States, into a success in the world of mainstream journalism.

Passed away at the age of 75 in September 1993, Maynard is remembered as a pioneer in African-American journalism.

His legacy lives on through his work and contributions to the field of journalism.

Maynard's words of wisdom continue to inspire those in the field today.

Dinosaur Park. "In the Line of Fire" and "Last Action Hero" were just a few of the summer's blockbuster films.

"Jurassic Park," the highest-grossing film this summer, is the first of its kind to have a sequel, earning it a spot on the list of all-time greats.

Although "Jurassic Park" has many fine acting performances, the three-quarter view of the characters may be the reason why some critics feel that the special effects are overdone.

"Asteroid Park" is the urban setting where "In the Line of Fire" takes place, while the movie's characters must fight for survival in order to escape the asteroid-attack action.

"Last Action Hero" stars Nick (Robert Prosky), a movie producer who has survived bullets, overcome life or death battle between Leary and Schweizer.

"Jurassic Park" received a last place in the box office rankings due to the poor acting and special effects. However, the film's special effects are the only redeeming feature.

The Columbia Pictures release "Jurassic Park," starring Jeff Goldblum as a young man who learns about the dangers of playing with dinosaurs.

Matthew Uzukwu's novel ACROSS CULTURES (FELI PUBLISHING; August 15, 1993; Paperback original) is a moving and gripping narrative on a familiar subject • romantic relationships and marital unions. His story in ACROSS CULTURES which revolves around a romantic/marital union across cultures, one American and the other African, is rarely told.

The main characters • Chima and Mavis are of different cultural backgrounds and the narrative traces Chima's herculean efforts to make it to America, his subsequent development of a romantic relationship with the charming and attractive Mavis, ultimately culminating in marriage, and finally, tragic choices Chima was forced to make in the end to both satisfy his conservative African family and powerful supernatural forces.

ACROSS CULTURES deals mostly with the pressures put on a young African male to conform to tradition, including and arranged marriage, at great cost to what he really felt in his heart - love and devotion to the woman he really loved. Because the issues woven together to create this powerfully gripping story are as contemporary as they are relevant, this book is a must, particularly to those of African and African-American heritage.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR
Matthew Uzukwu attended Washington State University and Howard University. He holds a master of business administration degree from the Howard University Graduate School of Business Administration. He has worked in private business and in government, and currently resides in the Washington D.C. area.
