activist calls for capitalism's end in Howard address

By Alyha Davis

Howard Chaplain

"If you see a fight against the system, you'll overcome it and pull you down with it." Kwame Ture, revolutionary activist and Howard University graduate, said in his lecture in the Arizona Black Student Center in the Howard University Canvas on February 25.

Ture's lecture, part of the Arizona region's "Art, Identity and Power in Africa" conference, showcased the black female perspective. A keynote address at Howard University's 127th Annual Women's Conference showcases black female success. The author of "Race Matters," Howard's keynote address to the Howard University community before obtaining his degree, was by Pulitzer Prize winner and political philosopher to an audience at the African American Studies Program. "The only reason I'm here is because I can get extra credit for writing a report on this," Howard student said.

The Second Annual Women's Conference took place earlier this week, with nearly 300 women in attendance.

The conference was sponsored by the African American Studies Program. The event was held to raise awareness about the discrimination faced by African American women and to promote women's issues.

Several workshops were held, including discussions on entrepreneurship, leadership, politics, and cultural identity. A keynote address by Brenda Fortenberry, a social worker and activist, emphasized the importance of education and empowerment.

One of the scheduled speakers in the conference of African-American student leaders is the President of the National Association of Education Students, who will speak on "The Role of the African-American Child in the Development of Black Education." This program is to be held in the public forum on the second floor of the School of Education.

"I am excited about participating in the conference. Education is a public issue because there is such a high demand for black education, and people really need to come out and listen to these issues," said Hoover. She is a dental student at the University of Pennsylvania and is a member of the Student Senate of the University of Pennsylvania.

She will also address the concerns of minority students in the conference. "The Greeks were not allowed to require any particular standards for membership," said Hoover. "The problems they have now are not automatically granted." She also said there is a standard process for Greek organizations to enter the University of Pennsylvania.

Not all Pan-Hellenic Greek organizations request membership in the conference. "None of the eight Greek organizations belonging to the Pan-Hellenic Council can participate in the conference," said Watkins. "They have not met the criteria for membership in the conference." She added that the criteria for membership are not automatically granted.

Get rid of the hazing

But brothers of Kappa Alpha Psi will never forget the Saturday morning, Feb. 12, 1994, when the death of a studen t from Southeast Missouri State University put an end to the boot-camp-like regret of an isolated incident. Kappa Alpha Psi, the organization in volve in both white and black fraternities, is stopped. They are delving into the history of the organization they are getting into, and tragedy will not be the last, unless hazing is taken out of the military. Michael Davis, 25, died of blunt trauma to the head from what appeared to be the result of hazing. Consider this an isolated incident. Kappa Alpha Psi organization.

Nor is it the only pledge case into a tragedy. The previous Missouri State incident concerned black fraternity members and athletes: stop the violence. Unfortunately, those factors may have been leading causes for fighting and mayhem on Sunday night. Arrange other officers during the weekend was a part at the Chamber of Sound located at 925 Main St. N.W. The party, that many other parties, offered a seemingly beautiful spirit of music and dance. Hazing was supposed to end. Everyone seemed to be having a good time until that all-too-familiar rhythm and orgies erupted. The mayhem continued, another fight erupts at a Howard University fraternity.

Immediately, the lights were turned on and the crowd was off out of the club. Due to the confusion, it was hard to determine who the individual culprits were, but it was clear that groups and organizations were involved—fraternity members and athletes. Again.

As disheveled party-goers file towards the cars, the fight erupted into the streets. The sensationalized culprits fled from the middle of the street, in the Old West, or in a gang-driven fight. The party, that many other parties, offered a seemingly beautiful spirit of music and dance. Hazing was supposed to end. Everyone seemed to be having a good time until that all-too-familiar rhythm and orgies erupted. The mayhem continued, another fight erupts at a Howard University fraternity.

Howard's South African affairs

There is a visible conflict relationship between South African students and the Howard University administration. The university’s failure to protect African students who are full-time at this institution from the violence that has been taking place is a violation of their human rights. An incident in which a white student was assaulted by a group of black students is a violation of the university’s policy.

On February 12, 1994, in the District of Columbia, a group of black students entered a Howard University dormitory. The black students were enrolled in various courses and were involved in the Black Student Union. The administration of Howard University did not provide any security to protect the students from the violence.

Mandela’s words in his 1993 keynote speech to the National Education Association were apropos: "If we are to realize the full potential of our national resources, we must make available to every child the opportunity to learn and develop their skills..."

For Howard University, such an opportunity has not been provided. The university has failed to protect the African students who are full-time at this institution. The university’s failure to protect the students is a violation of their human rights.

Letter to the Editor: Was King an idealist?

By Anthony Barnes

Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., the chairman of the Department of Philosophy and Social Sciences at Howard University, has been described as an idealist by many. He was known for his pacifist views and his commitment to nonviolent resistance. However, some have questioned whether he was truly an idealist.

Dr. King was quoted as saying, "I have a dream that one day this nation will rise up and live up to the true meaning of its creed: 'We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal.'"

However, some have argued that Dr. King’s idealism was too utopian and unrealistic. They point to his failure to address the structural inequalities and systemic racism that exist in society.

Dr. King himself recognized the need to confront the real world and the complexities of implementing his ideas. He once said, "It is not enough to dream. We must also do."

Despite these criticisms, Dr. King’s idealism continues to inspire many people. His legacy reminds us of the importance of striving for a better world and the power of hope and nonviolent resistance.

Enough is enough; frats, athletes: stop the violence

The three-day event we had this past week for President Clinton’s trip was a bummer to many students. The violence and destruction that occurred was not acceptable. The university administration must take responsibility for the safety of its students.

The Black Student Union (BSU) at Howard University has been advocating for more resources and better representation for African-American students. Despite this, the BSU faced violence and destruction during the weekend.

We, the students of Howard University, demand an end to the violence and destruction. We call on the university administration to take immediate action to prevent further incidents.

James T.K. Baldwin

The novel "Middle Passage" is a powerful, intelligent examination of the experiences of slaves on American ships. The author, James T.K. Baldwin, was a prominent African-American writer and educator. His work is notable for its depth and insight into the human experience, particularly in the context of race and identity. The novel, "Middle Passage," is a significant contribution to American literature and deserves recognition for its thought-provoking themes and the way it explores the complexities of the slave trade and its legacy.

Beverly Gray

Beverly Gray's essay, "Black Heroes Personify Excellence," is a thought-provoking piece that highlights the importance of recognizing and celebrating the achievements of African-American figures. Gray focuses on the example of Martin Luther King Jr., who is portrayed as a symbol of excellence and a model for aspiring leaders. Through her analysis, Gray emphasizes the need for individuals to emulate King's commitment to justice and equality, encouraging readers to strive for excellence in their own pursuits.

Laurie S. Grant

Laurie S. Grant, a Spanish professor at Howard University, offers insights into the historical and cultural context of the novel "Middle Passage." Her essay is a valuable contribution to understanding the novel's themes and significance within the broader context of African-American literature and history.

Antonia J. Barnes

Antonia J. Barnes' essay, "Students Must Control Their Own Destinies," is a compelling argument for empowering students to take charge of their educational journey. Barnes encourages educators to support students in their self-directed learning, emphasizing the importance of autonomy and the role of the university in fostering a culture of responsibility and self-advocacy.

James B. Hylton

James B. Hylton's essay, "Only Goodness Comes from Sacrifice," explores the idea that sacrifice is essential for progress and personal growth. Hylton argues that, while sacrifice may be difficult, it is necessary for achieving one's goals and contributing positively to society. His insights are particularly relevant in the current era, where the value of sacrifice is often questioned.

Emily R. Cooper

Emily R. Cooper's essay, "PERSPECTIVES: Only Goodness comes from sacrifice," is a thoughtful meditation on the concept of sacrifice and its implications for personal and societal development. Cooper suggests that sacrifice, when undertaken with a genuine desire to do good, can lead to profound personal growth and contribute positively to the world.

Karen L. Minor

Karen L. Minor's essay, "Students Must Control Their Own Destinies," underscores the importance of empowering students to take control of their educational experiences. Minor's perspective is grounded in the belief that students should be active participants in their learning process, enabling them to develop critical thinking skills and a sense of ownership over their academic success.

Delaney Davis

Delaney Davis, a masters student, reflects on the significance of sacrifice in the context of the novel "Middle Passage." Davis' essay is a personal exploration of how sacrifice has shaped her own academic journey and the broader cultural landscape. Her narrative serves as a testament to the transformative power of sacrifice.

Lisa Martinez

Lisa Martinez, a sociology professor at Howard University, delves into the complex impacts of sacrifice on society and individual lives. Her essay is a call to consider the role of sacrifice in fostering social justice and personal growth, highlighting the lessons that can be learned from the novel "Middle Passage."
ACADEMIC CLUSTERS

On a pilot basis, several "ACADEMIC CLUSTER" housing sections will be offered to students in several residence halls for 1994-95. If you are interested in being assigned to a corridor or section of your residence hall with others who share an interest in the same academic area, please indicate your interest in the appropriate space on the RSVP form. The number of students in an "academic cluster" in a particular building depends on the number of those who choose to participate, the student assignment pattern, and the design of the building. Participation in an academic cluster will NOT affect whether you receive the hall or room type of your choice. The size and arrangement of clusters will vary from hall to hall and may not be available in all buildings.

Webb Elementary embraces Black cultural values

By Miguel Burke
Philip Staff Writer

A typical day at Anne Walker's Webb Elementary School can be an enlightening experience. Every morning, wandering students come to school with a seemingly unattainable desire to learn. Eagerly, they seek out staff members for their daily hugs and greetings. The school is called the African American School because students and faculty alike believe that this is their home. Whether they reside in the classroom or the halls, Webbers, Swahili, Spanish, instrumental and vocal music, dance, and arts are. Like any other elementary school, the classes are divided into grade levels; however, there are about 15 students in a classroom so teachers can provide personalized, individual attention.

The school principal, who turns 70 this August to visit his children, founded Webbers Junior High School. He is a native of Ghana, and his educational philosophy is centered around the needs of his students. He believes that every child has the potential to be successful, regardless of their background or circumstances.

Webber Monument Write

The government will and respect my right to free speech. I will not be silenced. This is an excerpt from one of the many slave letters that Dr. Roland presented condensed during an analysis of the letters. Berlin, Reidy, Steven Miller, and their colleagues comprised a book of documents of more than 800 pages dealing with the Emancipation up to the Civil War, Reidy said. They studied four thick volumes of letters from all types of slaves. The majority of the letters were written in cursive and were difficult to transcribe. Reidy concentrated on the overall emotion in the documents, this being the Walker methodology.

The National Organization for Women, as it is called by many international women's groups, is one of the most powerful in any country. It was founded in the U.S. for closing wounds. and catgut sutures, leaving only a traditional ceremony in some cultures. This ceremony involves an older woman in the village or a community member, who is a spiritual leader, to carry out the procedure. The 10-year implementation period was established on Feb. 10. 1991, when the organization announced the passage of the new law. This law prohibits female genital mutilation (FGM) and requires the provision of information to doctors and clergy. FGM is a practice that occurs in many cultures around the world. It involves the excision of the clitoris or other parts of the female genitalia. The practice is performed without anesthesia, and the victim often suffers severe pain and infection. The practice is often performed on young girls, and the scars can last a lifetime. The law aims to end this practice and protect women's rights. The law is modeled after laws in other countries, such as Senegal and Djibouti, which have already banned FGM.

Ministry scholarship policy encourages student diversity

By Edna S. Callander

Step Staff Writer

Minority scholarship policy encourages student diversity

The majority scholarship policy has been undergoing changes since its inception in 1964, when the Bush administration introduced a federal law to promote diversity. The policy has evolved over the years, with changes in education and societal attitudes. In 1993, the policy was updated to include measures to promote diversity and encourage students from underrepresented groups to attend college. The policy now includes provisions for scholarships, grants, and other forms of financial aid to support students from diverse backgrounds. The policy is administered by the Office of Federal Student Aid, which provides funding to support the policy. The policy has been successful in promoting diversity in higher education, and it has been endorsed by many organizations and individuals. The policy is expected to continue to evolve and adapt to changing needs and circumstances.

Pennsylvania abortion restrictions upheld

A Pennsylvania law that restricts access to abortion services has been upheld by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. The law, which was passed in 1992, requires that women seeking an abortion must undergo a six-week waiting period and provide a signed consent form. The law also prohibits the provision of abortion services to women under the age of 18 without the consent of a parent or guardian. The law was challenged by Planned Parenthood, which argued that the restrictions violated a woman's right to privacy and free choice. The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania upheld the law, ruling that it was within the state's constitutional authority. The court also noted that the restrictions were intended to protect the health and safety of women.

Students react to hazing death at Southeast Missouri State

By Addie S. Callander

Step Staff Writer

The death of a Southeast Missouri State University student during hazing has prompted a nationwide discussion about the issue. The incident occurred at a fraternity event, where the student was being initiated into the fraternity. The student died as a result of the hazing, which involved the ingestion of a toxic substance. The incident sparked a nationwide debate about the issue of hazing and the need for stricter regulations and enforcement. The university has taken steps to address the issue, including implementing stricter hazing policies and providing training for students and staff. The issue has also raised questions about the role of Greek organizations in college life and the need for better oversight and accountability.

Elections violence leaves over 100 injured, one dead in St. Vincent

By Oran nome Ellis

Electoral violence erupted in the Caribbean state of St. Vincent on Saturday, leaving 100 injured and one dead in the violence. At least 150 were injured in the presidential elections.

Fearing violence, some voters stayed away from polling stations, while others lined up to vote. In the case of the voting in the state, the turn-out rate was below 20 percent. According to reports, the election commission was overwhelmed by the number of voters. A total of 60,000 people were expected to vote, but only about 12,000 actually did.

St. Vincent is a small island nation in the eastern Caribbean, known for its tropical climate and beautiful beaches. The country has a population of about 100,000 people and is divided into two major political parties: the New Democratic Party of St. Vincent and the New Labour Party led by Sir New Rasande John. The New Labour Party is led by Prime Minister Ryan. The seat of the elections is in the town of Kingstown, which is the capital of the state. The election was held on March 27.

In the state, the New Labour Party led by Sir New Rasande John won a majority of seats in the election and Raysond John will become the new Prime Minister. The New Democratic Party is led by Prime Minister Rasande John. The New Labour Party won 12 of the 15 seats, while the New Democratic Party won 3 seats.

In St. Vincent, the New Labour Party is the largest political party and it has been in power since 1995. The New Democratic Party has been in power for 16 years.

South Africa conference a success despite low turn-out

By Gloria McPhail

Howard University is hosting a conference on the African continent that began yesterday and is expected to attract at least 1,000 delegates.

The conference, which is being held under the auspices of the School of International Studies, is expected to focus on issues relating to the African continent, including political, economic, and social developments.

The conference will bring together leaders from various countries, including political leaders, academics, and activists, to discuss the challenges and opportunities facing the continent.

The conference is expected to conclude tomorrow, with a closing ceremony that will feature speeches by the conference organizers and a panel discussion on the key issues that were discussed during the conference.

The conference is being held at the Howard University Campus Center, and is open to the public.

A Glance Around The World

Mexico City

The Mexican government has announced that it will not participate in the International Olympic Committee (IOC) meeting in Lausanne, Switzerland.

The Mexican government has decided not to participate in the meeting due to the ongoing political crisis in the country.

The crisis has been caused by the ongoing protests and violence in the country, which has led to the death of several people.

The Mexican government has stated that it will continue to monitor the situation and will make a decision about its participation in future meetings in the future.

Rastafari film show planned

In honor of Black History Month, the Rainforest Community of Washington, D.C. will be hosting a symposium at the American University, on February 10, 2014.

The event will feature a screening of the film "Rastafari: The Birth of a Nation," which explores the history of the Rastafari movement and its impact on African American culture.

The film will be followed by a panel discussion with Rastafari community leaders and scholars.

Elections violence leaves over 100 injured and dead in St. Vincent

By Orpah Vins

Elections violence erupted in the Caribbean state of St. Vincent and the Grenadines on Thursday, leaving at least 100 injured and 14 dead, according to the government.

Violent clashes broke out between supporters of the two main political parties in the capital, Kingstown, on Thursday night.

Prime Minister James Mitchell, who was sworn in as prime minister of 12 of the 15 seats, visited the hospital on Monday. Three candidates from St. Vincent have already been eliminated.

Due to the success of the two major parties, the ruling New Democratic Party of Mitchell, St. Vincent and the Grenadines party led by the opposition leader, and the Movement for National Unity led by lawyer and political activist, have faced violent clashes.

The government has imposed a state of emergency in the country, and the two main political parties have called for a nationwide general strike.

The government has also announced that it will ban all public gatherings and demonstrations until further notice.

“Coalescence” slate wins HUSA election by 55 votes

ELECTIONS, from A1

"Students come to the University, we work with the homeless, we have jobs right downtown, we work across the street with the elderly and we are an important part of this community," said Dana White, a Sutton resident assistant.

Many Howard students who do not live in the dormitory depend on their needs downtown. In addition to the area's museums, monuments and shopping malls, many of the downtown jobs are walking distance from Sutton.

Regarding students who are planning to move into Eton Towers, many Howard students who do not live in the dormitory depend on their needs downtown. In addition to the area's museums, monuments and shopping malls, many of the downtown jobs are walking distance from Sutton.

The unity among the candidates demonstrated by the low student apathy did not alleviate the student apathy surrounding the candidates who should win the election.

The type of living here cannot be the same if I was put on campus. It just proves that you can't keep some students from being disenfranchised in serious issues in a serious problem on campus that they hope to solve.

Students who work in the University and downtown are not always liking the food, but when I didn't have any money in my pocket, it's not coming from Aria, said.

Reginald X campaigned to implement an optional plan because the current one does not cater to the cafeteria and not always liking vegetarians and the cost of the plan.

Students who work in the University and downtown are not always liking the food, but when I didn't have any money in my pocket, it's not coming from Aria, said.

Mandatory meal plans are beneficial, I remember eating in plans for students living on campus.

Eton Hall will become coed dormitory. But some students at the adjustment.

Sutton residents say it is just not the right option to choose where to live. The options are expensive, and I will not get the most people," said undergraduate trustee candidate M. Kasim Recd.

"I had always hoped to come back in five years and still will not be able to live in the dorms. I am a consumer, my parents are consumers and my needs are not being met. I am a vegetarian, and I cannot have any options to choose where to live."
Michael remembers waking up to the sound of his father starting that brand new car on a Saturday morning. Instead of watching cartoons, he would spend hours watching his father at the yard. When the yard work was done, Michael always had cold drink for his son and Michael always thanked him with a smile and a kiss. No matter what, Michael loved his father. But what his father did was even more telling.

Unfortunately, Michael’s situation has been duplicated over and over again throughout the nation. The determination of the black family, just as many others, is at stake. According to University of Wisconsin anthropologist Larry L. Bumpass, a black child who is growing up with two parents is a rarity. Boys who are growing up with two parents, or black male and female, boys tend to fail the test.

Boys need a man around to show them how to be real men.

Reginald, junior majoring in engineering, said: "I do not have any realization of a father. My mother told me that my father is dead. I think I talk when I'm about 19 years old, but I then remember what he looked like. If I have any children, I probably wouldn't even know them.

When I was a lot younger, I used to play with other boys my age. They had a lot of time with their fathers. I was always alone. I often wished that my father would have been there. He could have taught me something.

Loyd, minor majoring in fine arts, said: "I hate my father. He did not do what he was supposed to do. I was always thinking of him. I often wished that he was my father."

Michael's situation is not unique. Many African-American boys have grown up without a father.

My mother taught me everything I needed to know about being a man. She is the principal in my life. She is the one who brought me into this world. She is the one who raised me. She is the one who loved me. She is the one who took care of me. She is the one who taught me how to be a man.

I learned from my mother that a man should be strong. A man should be able to take care of himself. A man should be able to take care of his family. A man should be able to take care of his children. A man should be able to take care of his wife. A man should be able to take care of his parents. A man should be able to take care of his friends. A man should be able to take care of his community. A man should be able to take care of his country. A man should be able to take care of the world.

Michael's situation is not unique. Many African-American boys have grown up without a father.

I know it's not right to hate my father, but I can't help my feelings. I wish that I had the kind of relationship with my father that a lot of other guys at Howard have with theirs, but I know that it will never be.

Howard professors on brink of technological breakthrough

Engineering research team could inspire computer chip-powered automobile of the future

By Derrick M. Dennis
Hilltop Staff Writer

For Howard University engineering professors Michael Spencer and Gary Harris, computer chips, blue lasers and electron spectrometers make the average workshop exciting and fun.

Building on small successes, working as a team while having fun, these engineers are spending their days behind closed doors at the University's Materials Science Research Center finding hope to make our country's future a little closer.

"The real excitement is in the early design stages of a computer chip, to withstand this heat, combustion and radiation of tomorrow's automobiles while diagnosing specific medical problems.

In fact, Spencer and Harris see the evolution of the automobile industry through the diagnosis of medical problems when they reach their potential.

"Eventually, the applications will be diagnostic, engine problems and locate where on the engine the servicing will be necessary," Spencer said. "That is a big project that requires us to look at one piece of the puzzle at a time."

These pieces include researching and experimenting with various applications of silicon carbide, a substance that Harris and Spencer say is very hard.

"Silicon carbide is really the best material for developing semiconductor devices," Spencer said. "One drawback of silicon carbide is the temperature it can withstand."

"It is this property that makes it very useful and applicable to materials science literature," Harris said.

Though much of their research is in the lab, Harris and Spencer say it can be compared to putting together pieces of a puzzle. Harris says the little successes, or finding the puzzle pieces, are the reasons he comes to work everyday excited and joyful.

"I think this is probably the most exciting time for research since the industrial revolution," Harris said. "When I joined this laboratory in 1980, it was 180 degrees different.

They see their research is still years and experiments and discoveries away from being able to launch the automobile of the future."

"We aren't about four years away from actually being able to launch the chip," Harris said. "There are some things that are already marketplace like the blue lasers, which are used in everything from computer printers and CD players to lighting displays and cars.

"However, despite the potential material successes of the chip and related technology, Harris and Spencer point out that their advances were no means made overnight. In fact, Spencer and Harris both remember a time when they could only imagine working with the type of machines and technology they now have in the laboratory.

"We used to talk about what machines we would like to have and be able to work with," Harris said. "Now, we have that technology and can move further toward making our dreams come true."

According to Harris, silicon carbide, which is used in many machines and devices away from actually being able to launch the chip, "is a milestone in computer technology," Harris said. "We now have them built and can take them apart, examine them in a laboratory and test their properties."

"These are the properties that will eventually be used because of the advancements they have planned for their applications and some of those properties will always be used in every machine," Harris said.

"Silicon carbide is expensive, but it is unbreakable and highly resistant to heat and harsh conditions and environments. But silicon carbide is a material that will not last in and of itself. It has to be used in combination with some other material to make the chip work."

"The pieces that are made up of silicon carbide are preferable to "materi..." Harris said. "Now, if you have a material like Harris and Spencer."

Practical Exam

As a student, you are used to studying and being tested. When you have prepared for the test, you have the knowledge and the confidence to do more than just "get by." When you are truly prepared for a challenge you know it.

As a Military Policeman in the District of Columbia National Guard, you'll train to meet and surpass those challenges. Whether you are on patrol in a residential area or securing weapons and supplies in a combat area, one thing is certain. This kind of training and leadership experience can give you what it takes to protect and serve our nation's capital. That brand of experience brings the confidence to pass whatever test you may face.

There are other benefits you'll receive besides leadership qualities. As a "Capital Guardian" you may qualify for over $3000 in tuition assistance and salary over your six-year enlistment. For a few days a month and a few weeks a year, you can get your college degree and a few things that you won't find in a textbook. Be ready for your next exam.

rappling with the best freshmen wrestlers

Sara Riggins

Sara Riggins often waits until spring and fall to see the best high school wrestlers. However, this year’s exception, especially for Jud Grapplers Wrestling team, will be in the fall as Howard University head coach Paul Collon introduces the starting lineup for the season.

When I was in high school, a wrestler was the last thing I wanted to be, but I knew I had to join the team. I had heard about how tough wrestling was, and I was afraid of the intensity. However, I realized that I could not make a hockey team, so I joined the wrestling team. I was nervous about how the team would react, but they were supportive and welcoming.

I have been considering wrestling as a potential sport for a while now, and I think it would be a good fit for me. I enjoy the physicality and the competitive nature of wrestling.

My dad is a swimmer, and he taught me how to swim when I was young. He always encouraged me to try new things, and wrestling seems like a natural fit.

Wrestling is a sport that requires a lot of dedication and hard work. I think I have the potential to be successful in wrestling, and I am excited to see how I can improve as a wrestler.

I think that wrestling is a sport that can help me develop my character and learn important life skills. I am looking forward to the season and to seeing how I can contribute to the team.
