Just a line Friend:

In the midst of this turmoil, strife and conflict of human wills and flesh nothing is more refreshing than writing you a few lines, each of which recalls a grand experience.

I am well and am facing likewise under the rigors and hardships of war. My chin is high and there is a smile on my face although within me there burns a fire kindled by the inequities of this world program of away to end wars.

I have had some of the most cheering letters imaginable from those I love and live for the day when I shall be able to champion the causes for which their training has guided me. You are not the least among those.

Your words, those made public and those, man to man, ring in my ears and their echoes shall be heard by the man.

At the threshold of a most important point I want you to know that you have been an inspiration. Will see you soon. 4/19/44

Dear Mr. Daniel:

Your very nice letter of March 21st has reached me and I want you to know that I was more than glad to receive it. I am fine and I am glad to learn that you are well too.

I have had letters from many of the former students of the law school and other branches of the university. They have come from widely scattered and remote parts of the globe. Bailey has just written me and from he has included in his letter, the missive had to circumnavigate the world in order to reach me. He is getting along nicely.

Well, it has been a year since I left the shores of the United States. However, never for a moment have I failed to keep in constant touch with the events and achievements of those who have the task of keeping the home fires burning. In fact, I firmly believe that they who have been working on my native shores have done an excellent job. Perhaps with you as well as with us the sword will not be laid aside until the job is done.

I noted in your letter that you have taken on the cloak of additional instructional responsibilities. I am sure, however, that no one of the courses will be in the least wise affected. This is not meant to be a eulogy, but now many will come to learn of the hidden talents long obscured by the excellence of your work as law librarian.

In closing, please pass on to the members of the faculty and student body my most sincere regards and remember me to you wife.

Most sincerely,
