Biographical/Historical note

Alain LeRoy Locke (1885-1954) was a teacher, philosopher, author, and critic. Locke was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, on September 13, 1885, to Mary Hawkins and Pliny Locke.

The educational achievements of both Locke and his family were outstanding and rare for the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Locke's paternal grandfather, Ishmael Locke, attended Cambridge University in Great Britain under the sponsorship of the Society of Friends and later established schools in Liberia. Locke's father, Pliny Locke, graduated from Howard University's Law Department and then worked as an educator and a government clerk. Locke's mother, Mary Hawkins Locke, taught in New Jersey.

Alain Locke, one of the leading intellectuals of the first half of the twentieth century, won acclaim throughout his educational career. Among his achievements was his selection as a Rhodes Scholar from Pennsylvania. He was not only the first, but also the only black Rhodes Scholar during his lifetime. Locke later earned a Ph.D. in Philosophy from Harvard University

Upon the 1925 publication of The New Negro: An Interpretation, Locke emerged as spokesman of what he coined "The New Negro Movement", known today as the Harlem Renaissance.

Although Locke is best known for his promotion of the Harlem Renaissance, his contributions reached beyond the arts. For more than forty years, Locke contributed to the improvement of Howard University and its community. He envisioned the University as a center for black intellectuals, and for the study of race and culture contacts. In 1916, with the support of the campus chapter of the N.A.A.C.P., Locke delivered a series of five lectures, collectively known as "Race Contacts and Interracial Relations." He also labored assiduously to secure a chapter of Phi Beta Kappa at Howard. During most of Locke's career, his formal association with Howard University was as Professor of Philosophy and Head of the Department of Philosophy. In 1953, because of his contributions to Howard, the university took the unusual step of awarding him a Doctor of Humane Letters degree.

Locke supported a variety of progressive causes throughout his career. During the 1930s and 1940s he actively promoted adult education. In 1935 he helped found the Associates in Negro Folk Education (ANFE) and served as secretary. Between 1935 and 1940 ANFE published a series of primers about topics related to black Americans. Locke wrote two of these "Bronze Booklets," Negro Art: Past and Present and The Negro and His Music. In 1946 he became the first black American elected to the presidency of the American Association for Adult Education (AAAE).

Another of Locke's favored ideals, was that of cultural pluralism. He served in or belonged to several organizations that fostered this belief, including the Conference on Science, Philosophy and Religion and the Progressive Education Association.

Because of his prominence as a black American intellectual, Locke had always been a widely sought after educator and speaker. By the end of World War II, white universities also welcomed him. In 1946 Locke served as visiting professor of philosophy at the University of Wisconsin, becoming the first black man to hold tenure from a white American university.

Scope Note

The papers of Alain Locke (1885-1954), teacher, philosopher, author, and critic, span the period from 1841 to 1983, and measure approximately ninety-two cubic feet (116 linear feet). The bulk of the papers covers the period from 1898 to 1954. In 1956 Moorland-Spingarn acquired the collection, which Locke had bequeathed to Howard University. The majority of Locke's papers consist of correspondence and writings, reflecting his involvement in a wide range of cultural, literary, educational, and civic activities. A sizable amount of family papers, financial documents, organizational materials, and photographs are also included.

The family papers record the Lockes' educational and occupational achievements. They include certificates, letters of appointment, resignation and dismissal, writings, and legal and financial documents. The family correspondence is mainly comprised of letters that Pliny and Mary wrote during their courtship from 1869 to 1882. However, the papers also contain some of Ishmael Locke's correspondence, dating from 1841.

The education series contains mostly writings, including Locke's thesis and numerous essays, as well as printed material. Also of interest is the correspondence between Locke and his mother. These letters, sometimes written daily, chronicle Locke's educational life and early career.

Locke's writings about contemporary black American and African literature and art established him as a leading authority on black culture. His writings, as well as many speeches and lectures he was called upon to give, are well represented in the collection. They include books, articles, reviews, in both published and manuscript form, and an extensive amount of notes about various topics.

The collection thoroughly documents Locke's writings, including The New Negro and its predecessor Harlem: Mecca of the New Negro, a work that Locke edited for a special March 1925 edition of Survey Graphic. Locke's pivotal role in the evolution of the Harlem Renaissance is further documented in the abundant correspondence and organizational materials in the collection. Also documented is his role as intermediary between patrons of the arts and black artists and literati of the era. From 1927 to 1945 Locke frequently corresponded with Charlotte Mason, a self-proclaimed "godmother" to several black writers, artists, and performers. The letters between Mason and Locke chronicle the roles that each played in promoting black culture. Also among Locke's many correspondents were Langston Hughes, Zora Neale Hurston, Countee Cullen, Richmond Barthe, Charles S. Johnson, and Rene Maran. The collection includes manuscripts written by Hughes, Hurston, Cullen, Maran, and McKay and photos of sculpture created by Barthe. It also contains extensive correspondence between Mason and her prodigies, and a contract between Mason and Hurston.

In 1916, with the support of the campus chapter of the N.A.A.C.P., Locke delivered a series of five lectures, collectively known as "Race Contacts and Interracial Relations." Transcriptions of these are in the collection.<sup>1</sup> He also labored assiduously to secure a chapter of Phi Beta Kappa at Howard. Shortly before his 1953 retirement, Locke spoke at the new chapter's installation ceremony. Correspondence, reports, programs, and photographs documenting this effort and its fruition are found throughout the collection.

Locke supported a variety of progressive causes throughout his career. During the 1930s and 1940s he actively promoted adult education. In 1935 he helped found the Associates in Negro Folk Education (ANFE) and served as secretary. Between 1935 and 1940 ANFE published a series of primers about topics related to black Americans. Locke wrote two of these "Bronze Booklets," Negro Art: Past and Present and The Negro and His Music. In 1946 he became the first black American elected to the presidency of the American Association for Adult Education (AAAE). Included in the collection are many materials concerning these two organizations.

Another of Locke's favored ideals, was that of cultural pluralism. He served in or belonged to several organizations that fostered this belief, including the Conference on Science, Philosophy and Religion and the Progressive Education Association. The collection contains printed material, reports, correspondence, and writings that document his activities in these and related organizations. Also notable among the papers are materials concerning two of Locke's 1942 editing projects, When Peoples Meet: A Study in Race and Culture, co-edited with Bernhard Stern, and Color: Unfinished Business of Democracy, a special issue of Survey Graphic.

Because of his prominence as a black American intellectual, Locke had always been a widely sought after educator and speaker. The correspondence, writings, and organizational materials in the collection attest to the demand that individuals and groups placed on his schedule. By the end of World War II, white universities also welcomed him. In 1946 Locke served as visiting professor of philosophy at the University of Wisconsin, becoming the first black man to hold tenure from a white American university. The collection documents Locke's term at Wisconsin, as well as his tenure at several other universities, where he served as a guest lecturer.

1 Although Locke intended to publish these lectures, their publication did not occur until nearly forty years after his death. See Alain Locke, Race Contacts and Interracial Relations: Lectures on the Theory and Practice of Race, ed. Jeffrey C. Stewart (Washington, DC: Howard University Press, 1992).

Financial notes	9	12

Series C: Correspondence*Series Description

Consists of letters, telegrams, greeting cards, and postcards from friends, family, admirers, and professional associates throughout the world. Contains many speaking requests, letters with artists, writers, university officials, and gallery directors. Also includes copies and drafts of Locke's outgoing correspondence. Contains hundreds of letters between Locke and his mother, chronicling his educational life and early career. Other frequent correspondents include Charlotte Mason, a patron of Locke and other Harlem Renaissance literati; Charles S. Johnson, Arthur Fauset, and Countee Cullen. Correspondence with members of some organizations, including Harvard and Oxford Universities, and Survey Associates is arranged according to the names of these organizations. (See also Series A, Personal Papers for Howard University dismissal and retirement correspondence; Series B, Family Papers, family correspondence; Series D, Writings by Locke, for correspondence related to works that

Series D: Writings by Locke*Series Description

Arranged alphabetically and includes speeches, articles, reviews, notes, and books, either written or edited by Locke. Research materials, financial papers, galleys, reviews, and publishers correspondence relating to a particular book are grouped together, under the book's title. Bronze Booklets written both by Locke and others are grouped together under the title "Bronze Booklets." For publication of Locke's lectures, "Race Contacts and Inter-Racial Relations" see Alain Locke, Race Contacts and Interracial Relations: Lectures on the Theory and Practice of Race, ed. Jeffrey C. Stewart (Wash., DC: Howard University Press, 1992). (See also Series P, Oversize, for galley proofs of The Negro in Art.)

Charles Close School

Series Description

Arranged by institution. Contains primarily Locke's notes, writings, exams, and organizational printed material that he gathered while a student. This series also includes documents relating to Locke's appointment as a Rhodes Scholar. Prominent among Locke's writings are his thesis, dissertation, and award-winning essays. (See also Series C, Correspondence, for Harvard and Oxford correspondence. See Series M, Photographs, for images of the campuses and events from Harvard and Oxford Universities.)

Series H: Programs and Tickets

Travel information	164	36

Series H: Programs and Tickets*Series Description

Programs are divided into those on which Locke's name appears to Box 164-174 and those on which it does not appear. The programs that include his name consist primarily of events at which he spoke and are organized chronologically. The programs on which his name does not appear are divided into those from Black-related events and those from other events. Within those categories they are initially arranged by type of event, and secondly by date. Tickets represent events that Locke attended, but in which he did not participate.

Series I: Organizations

Series Description

Consists primarily of printed material from organizations that Locke was either associated with or whose members sent information to Locke. Among those that the collection documents extensively, and in which Locke played a pivotal role, are the American Association for Adult Education, The Associates in Negro Folk Education, The Conference on Science, Philosophy and Religion, The Emancipation Proclamation Commission of New Jersey, and Phi Beta Kappa. Although this series contains some correspondence, see Series C, Correspondence, for most of the organizational correspondence. (See also Series D, Writings by Locke, for materials relating to the Bronze Booklets.)
