Turner shocks Howard with his candor

By Erik Mckinney

Talking about everything from his first sexual encounter to the suicide of his father, media mogul Ted Turner was candid about the entire experience. Turner, through his honesty and lack of guilt or regret, opened people's eyes to his personal life. He talked about the mistakes that cost him his second runner-up, was important is your integrity as a person. Having experienced the error, contestants.

"I basically thought it wasn't [all that I could do] through the姬千s and couldn't be broadcast and cable. But, instead he had views about the Miller Merry March and women's rights. And, that's why I had written millions. Well, it was more than the 57-year-old millionnaire did some advice to start communications and businesses.

"America has a lot of deep-seated problems, but we have a lot of weapons to fight those problems," Turner said. "They're going to be the get used to it. I'm going to have those problems and the generation to make changes. I know we need to do more, we need to do better."

"Without an estimated $30 billion of waste and a lot of money could be better spent," Turner said. "There's something that he's most to life is more important than one's ability to live a life of service."

"Because he felt that's important to the importance of giving up," Turner said. "Never, never, never give up," Turner said. "You have to lose your fortunate luck happened. You're Radiation's, Mr. School of Communications. What happened was a mistake and it's hard to get used to."

"I thought it was funny when I first heard about the mistakes that Turner made and the mistakes he's had," Brooks said. "Never, never, never give up."

Fight at Drew Hall leaves students asking for increased security in dormitories

By Elona Martha Hill

What started as a row of students throwing objects from their dormitory window escalated into an attempt to start a riot. The confrontation between the students and the university police led to a violent altercation that left one student injured.

"I didn't know what was happening in the dormitory, but I heard there was a lot of commotion and noise," said a witness who asked not to be identified. "When I looked out the window, I saw a group of students throwing objects down at the police officers. It looked like they were trying to start a riot or something.

The university police arrived on the scene and started to try to calm the situation down. But the students continued to throw objects and try to disrupt their work.

One of the strategies planned during the conference was a multiracial participation in all discussions. Segregation and discrimination were widespread at the two-day conference.

But the police were able to contain the situation and eventually disperse the students. However, the incident left many students with unanswered questions and concerns about the security in their dormitories.

"I don't feel safe in my dormitory anymore," said a student who asked to remain anonymous. "I'm worried about what might happen next."
Traffic makes campus streets hazardous

The AMTA sponsors the student-run snack bar. The Barb-Hop Snack Shop is open to everyone. "The snack bar is a place where students can socialize and have fun," said Carole Stone, a sophomore majoring in criminal justice.

Student struck by car

By Kikora Austin

A male student named John Smith was struck by a car while crossing Fourth Street yesterday. Smith was taken to the hospital in critical condition. The impact of the car caused minor injuries to Smith's leg. The driver of the car fled the scene, leaving Smith lying on the street. Police are currently searching for the driver.

DC's businesses gain support from the March

By Yvonne Smith

The March will provide much-needed support for area businesses, many of which are at the core of the March's economic activities. The March is expected to attract tens of thousands of people from all over the world, and local businesses are anticipating a boost in sales as a result.

The March's activities are expected to generate $60 million to $80 million in revenue for local businesses, with the majority of that revenue coming from the sale of goods and services. Local businesses are preparing for a surge in demand for goods and services, and have increased their capacity to meet the anticipated increase in demand.

The March is also expected to bring in a large number of visitors, who are expected to spend money on food, lodging, transportation, and other services. Local businesses are preparing to accommodate the influx of visitors, and are anticipating a significant boost in revenue.

The March's activities are also expected to provide a significant boost to the local economy, with the potential to add millions of dollars to the city's GDP. The March is expected to create thousands of jobs, and to provide a much-needed boost to local businesses.

Pope Visits America, asks for a better nation

By Arnaud Jamal Johnson

Scholars and students gathered on Sunday, the final day of the Million Man March, to hear Pope John Paul II speak at the Lincoln Memorial. "I hope this experience will bring about a new beginning in the nation," he said.

The papal visit to the U.S. began a week earlier, when the Pope arrived in New York City on Friday, September 12. He was accompanied by First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton and First Gentleman Billy Clinton.

Two large Black religious groups denounce Million Man March

By Jonathan L. Worton

Even though the Million Man March was held, the leaders of the two large religious groups decided not to participate in the event.

Louis Farrakhan, leader of the Nation of Islam, and Jesse Jackson, leader of the Black Nationalist Lawmakers' Caucus, both said they would not participate because of the organizers' support for the Million Man March.

Farrakhan told a news conference at the National Press Club that the Million Man March is a "false solution to a false problem." He said the march is "a way of promoting the false idea that there is no legitimate political process for black people." He added, "We are not going to participate because we believe in the political process.

Jackson, who is the co-chairman of the Million Man March, said, "We are not going to participate because we believe in the political process.

Supreme Court dismantles desegregation program

By Arnaud Jamal Johnson

The Supreme Court has ruled that a desegregation program in Alabama is unconstitutional. The court said the program violates the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Chief Justice William Rehnquist wrote in the majority opinion that the program is "an end run around the Constitution." He said the program is "a thinly veiled attempt to achieve racial segregation in violation of the Constitution.

The court's decision is a setback for the civil rights movement, which has been fighting to end racial segregation for decades.

Officials call train crash possible act of sabotage

By Janine Lynette Thompson

A train crash near Waco, Texas, last week was deemed a possible act of sabotage by federal officials. The crash killed one crew member and injured two others.

The train was traveling on a curve when it hit a tree and derailed. The train car with the engine and caboose remained on the tracks, but the other cars derailed and fell off the tracks.

Federal officials said they are investigating the crash as a possible act of sabotage. They are looking into whether the crash was caused by an intentional act or whether it was an accident.

"This was a possible act of sabotage," said U.S. Attorney General John Ashcroft. "We are not ignoring this possibility.

The crash occurred near a small town in rural Texas. The train was traveling from Dallas to Houston when it derailed.

African art has been a focus of recent exhibits at the Smithsonian Institution, including a recent exhibit on African sculpture, which featured works from the 13th to the 20th centuries. The exhibit aimed to highlight the diversity and richness of African art and its contributions to the global artistic landscape.

While the exhibit itself was impressive, some visitors expressed concerns about the lack of contextual information and the limited representation of certain groups within the exhibit. The organizers acknowledged these limitations and are working to improve future exhibits to better reflect the complexity and diversity of African art.

Overall, the exhibit provided a valuable opportunity for visitors to engage with African art and to appreciate its historical and cultural significance. It is hoped that future exhibits will continue to build on this foundation and to challenge traditional notions of what constitutes "African art."

Rift between HU and community continues

Howard has a historical ambition of being an upper echelon university. The community is somewhat aware of this, but that awareness does not prevent them from expressing their discontent. This is often linked to the idea of Howard as a "sell-out," a term that carries a lot of weight among the community. The idea is that Howard is compromising its identity to become more mainstream.

There is a growing sense of frustration among the community. The administration is often seen as being out of touch with the needs and desires of the students. This is particularly true in light of recent events, such as the decision to close off-campus dorms in an attempt to tighten the Howard community. Last year, Howard purchased Miners' Tower College, which is generating a lot of discussion and concern among the community.

Along with the desire of student service organizations to maintain their autonomy, there is a strong sentiment among the community that Howard is not being responsive to their concerns. The administration is often seen as being more focused on maintaining its own interests.

As for the students of Howard, they are divided in their opinions. Some see the administration's actions as necessary to improve the university's financial situation, while others believe that the administration is not being responsive to their needs. The strength of these views is largely determined by the perceived fairness of the administration's decisions.

Students, administration have differing views on Million Man March

The Million Man March has sparked a lot of discussion among Howard students and the administration. Some students see it as an opportunity to make their voices heard, while others believe that the administration is using the event as a way to divert attention from its own problems.

The administration has been criticized for its handling of the event. Many students feel that the administration is not doing enough to address their concerns.

On the other hand, some students believe that the administration is taking the right steps to address the issues that have been raised. They point to the university's decision to close off-campus dorms as an example of the administration's willingness to make difficult decisions.

Jesse Jackson seeks publicity through March

Jesse Jackson's decision to seek publicity through the Million Man March has sparked a lot of debate. Some see it as a positive step, while others believe that it is a distraction from the real issues.

Jesse Jackson is a controversial figure, and his decision to participate in the Million Man March has been both praised and criticized. Some see it as a positive step, while others believe that it is a distraction from the real issues.

Jesse Jackson's decision to participate in the Million Man March has been both praised and criticized. Some see it as a positive step, while others believe that it is a distraction from the real issues.

Dear Editor,

Once again the Rev. Jesse Jackson has demonstrated the incredible and tireless nature of his character by way of his involvement in the Million Man March. Jackson has been a supporter of the March since its inception, and he has shown a commitment to fighting for social justice.

The Million Man March was held in Washington, D.C., on October 16, 1995, and it was organized by Jesse Jackson. The March was intended to bring attention to the issues facing African-American men and to call for unity and action.

The March was attended by thousands of people, and it generated a lot of attention in the media. Jesse Jackson delivered a powerful speech at the March, and he called for unity and action.

Jesse Jackson's involvement in the Million Man March is an example of his commitment to fighting for social justice. He has shown a willingness to get involved in important issues, and he has demonstrated a commitment to making a difference.

Sincerely,

Ronald"
Million Man March will yield huge benefits

Million Man March fulfills holy scriptures

By James YK Balduz

The anger of Black people against the nation's children is the most potent force in the history of our people. Our children are the ones who will inherit the land of the ancestors and the legacy of our forefathers. We must raise them properly and educate them with the knowledge of our past and future.

On October 18, the biggest demonstration in American history, the Million Man March, was launched. The march was organized by the Honorable Elijah Muhammad, the Minister of Islam, and his son, Minister Louis Farrakhan. The march was intended to show the world that Black people are not only capable of organizing and achieving their goals, but they also have the moral and ethical principles that are necessary to build a better society.

The march was a massive event, with millions of people participating. It was a great opportunity to show the world that Black people are not just victims of society, but they are capable of standing up for themselves and fighting for their rights.

While the march was a great success, there were also some problems that arose. Some people were arrested for disorderly conduct, and there were some incidents of violence. However, these incidents were few and far between, and they were quickly dealt with by the authorities.

The march was a great success, and it showed the world that Black people are not just passive victims, but they are capable of standing up for themselves and fighting for their rights. The march was a great opportunity to show the world that Black people are not just victims of society, but they are capable of organizing and achieving their goals.

How would you like to make what Scott McNealy makes?

Scott McNealy, CEO of Sun Microsystems, Inc., is known for making bold predictions about the future of technology. He is often quoted as saying, "The network is the computer." This illustrates his emphasis on the importance of connectivity in the world of computing.

But how does one go about becoming a leader in the tech industry like Scott McNealy? Here are some steps that you might consider:

1. Gain an excellent command of the language
   - Whether it's programming or business communication, mastering your subject matter is crucial.

2. Obtain a bachelor's degree by June 30, 1996
   - Education is a fundamental step in any career development.

3. Have an excellent command of the English language
   - Communication skills are essential in any industry.

4. Be willing to relocate to Japan for one year
   - Being open to new experiences and environments can broaden your perspective.

5. Be an American citizen or MBA/MS candidates
   - This requirement reflects the desire for candidates with a strong U.S. background.

6. Technical candidates
   - If you're interested in technical roles, consider gaining relevant experience through internships or certifications.

7. Learn about Sun Microsystems and its products
   - Knowing the company you're applying to is a good idea.

8. Have four better winners
   - Aim to stand out in your application process.

9. Be a true gentleman towards each other in handling the situation
   - Professionalism is key, especially in competitive environments.

10. Admit that this was a terrible mistake and promise that it was not done intentionally
    - Taking responsibility for errors is important.

11. End the contest, announce your decision, and deepen your relationship with your constituency
    - Communication is crucial in maintaining trust and support.

Remember, the path to success in the tech industry is often filled with unexpected twists and turns. Stay curious, keep learning, and be ready to adapt.

The Million Man March

Man to Man
Hand in Hand
It's got to be a Family Affair
Squaring, not evading and Fleeing
Community, not just to Yourself to be There.
Sisterhood, disciplined
Organized and standing tall
From the dirty bones in the valleys of Despair will heard the million call.

We wish to say
To America, that the day has come
Of justice, in our day
So we've come together
From all walks of life to
Start America on what's a day
And make it so we know
And we can stand up and sing
So we some more and work
One million strong.

Frontenay Church, Franciscan Fathers and Religious Affirmation
Let me come together
As one, for the love
Of the Black Woman.
After 400 years of being
Under siege, it's been Time
For a meeting of the minds
Yet, we are a nation
Within a nation
Behind enemy lines.

So let the enemies
out what they choose this holiday decision, is not about being on the six o'clock news.

All history here is
on Death Row
For the sake of nation Time
Next meeting of purpose
in a wake up call for a Reformation of the mind.

The Million Man

Never Anybody else
There is simply about
To change our moral and
and spiritual sense of self Never mind those who
Tell us what we can do not
When we know that we can never
The history of Assessment
is a message, from the very soul of the Blackman.

Never again will the hearts of men of Black men be
The hearts and victims
For so the very coincidences
And Search a past world must know
That a sleeping dragon has woken.

Solemnly, this book
Organized, and Standing Tall
And thru the dirty bones in the Valley of Despair will heard the Wake-up Call

Rain

I love the sound of the earth when it rains
The beautiful sight of the descending strides
Sweet Nature helping to lighten much pain.

Attracts our pains.

I love the sound of rain in the air
Evoking thoughts of my mother's slack
hair
Whispering softly that life can be fair.
Life will be fair.

Here the feel of raindrops on my skin.
The cool breath of Nature gives me in side gain
The tapping of God saying Child,
Let me in.

Come on in.

DISTANT LOVE

Somewhere out there you are for me
somewhere out there you long for me
I know not who you are
but in my mind you are my tomorrow
My tomorrow my tomorrow
You give me strength to go on living
You give me hope for
Yesterday today and forever
Forever and forever
I shall have you not now but someday for now I must perfect the art of loving so I will one day give you perfect love
Oh perfect love, oh perfect love continue to love from a distance
may I go on caressing myself in your existence
In your existence in your existence
In your existence
In your existence
In your existence
In your existence
In your existence
In your existence
In your existence
In your existence
In your existence
In your existence
In your existence
I do not know who you are but do you desire me as I do you
I do you in this just my dream
Dreams are on fire dream on for amidst this chaos
there is a haven where
when we wake up we will find each other there

CASUALTIES OF WAR:

By Ta-Nehisi Coates

The messenger, CNN, had just finished his live broadcast from the scene of the Oakland boat fire. He was dressed in his usual white shirt and black pants, the colors of the Africanist flag. He was standing on the deck of the ship, his microphone held close to his face. The camera zoomed in on his face, showing the concern and determination in his eyes. Behind him, smoke filled the air, the remnants of the fire that had claimed the lives of the passengers.

It was a cold morning in Oakland, and the CNN reporter was feeling the weight of his responsibility. He knew that the information he was relaying was going to be crucial in understanding the events that had led up to the tragedy. He had been following the story closely, tracking the developments and interviewing witnesses. Now, as he spoke, he was ensuring that the world knew what had happened.

The reporter paused, allowing the weight of his words to sink in. He knew that the story he was about to tell was going to change the course of events. And he was ready to tell it, because he knew that telling the truth was the only way to move forward.

He took a deep breath, then began to speak again, his voice clear and steady.

The messenger had arrived at the site of the fire, where he found a group of people gathered in shock and disbelief. The smoke was thick, making it difficult to see, but the reporter could make out the shapes of the passengers and crew, huddled together, their faces etched with worry.

As the reporter continued to speak, he couldn't help but feel a sense of urgency. He knew that the information he was sharing was critical, not only for understanding the event, but for preventing similar tragedies from happening again. He was determined to do his job, to tell the truth, and to help ensure that history would not repeat itself.

The messenger's report was watched by millions around the world, and it sparked a wave of discussions and debates. People were struggling to come to terms with what had happened, to understand the reasons behind the fire, and to figure out how to prevent similar tragedies from happening in the future.

Eventually, the investigation began, with experts and officials working together to piece together the story. Through their efforts, the truth was slowly revealed, and the world was able to come to grips with the tragic event that had occurred.

The messenger had done his job, and he knew that it was only the beginning. There was still much work to be done, much pain to be healed. But he was determined to be part of the process, to continue working towards a world where such tragedies would never happen again.

Ambitious journalism major makes big plans

Student dabbles in poetry, hair braiding, considers teaching

By Sandra E. Fields

October 13, 1995

Albka Solomon has a recording contract, published articles in YSB, writes poetry, braids hair and is a 21-year-old young woman.

When asked of her. public Albka Solomon said, "I want to do everything." This attitude is clearly seen in her career, which has been developing since she was 15 when she began writing poems.

"I was taught that the world is a book and those who do not read it stay at a standstill," Solomon said.

Since that time, Solomon has been busy and her ambition has been growing. As if editing a magazine isn't enough, Solomon also likes to write a novel, a recipe and poetry. She has also been working as a research assistant on a project involving "culturally conscious" hair products.

"I am working on a series of poems called 'The Culture of Hair,'" Solomon said.

"I want to get to the point where I can make a living from my writing," Solomon said. "I want to be able to support myself through my writing." Solomon is currently working on a novel, "The Little Black Book," which she hopes to publish within the next year.

The elected Steering Committee of the Howard University Faculty Senate and the elected student leadership of the Howard University Student Association (HUSA) met and discussed positions on the October 16th "Million-Man-March". The Steering Committee of the Senate issues the following statement to the University Community through the Chair of the Senate:

The goals and intentions of the Million-Man-March address one of the most pressing needs in our society, and one that, if further neglected, will threaten the infrastructure of the African-American community in particular; namely the need to reintegrate the male back into the family structure as a critical player in American family life. To this end the leadership of the independent Faculty Senate accepts our traditional and historic role of leadership in helping to build a better society, particularly for our most valued institution, the family.

While the University will not be closed, we encourage individual faculty members to be flexible with regard to classes and assignments on the day of the March. Recognizing that so many of our students and faculty colleagues feel strongly that they need to participate in the March, we feel that our students should not be penalized or placed in a disadvantaged position as a result of their attending the March. The March organizers have proposed that those who will not attend the March should continue to engage in the learning process in their own way. Faculty members attending the March are urged to make definite and mutually satisfactory arrangements with those students who wish to convene at their regularly scheduled time. Some faculty members may choose to convene their classes and attend the March afterward.

The Steering Committee gives full recognition to the importance of academic freedom, the rights of students to participate constructively in the democratic process, as well as the rights of our students who choose not to participate in the March.

We also recognize the desperate plight of so many American families,
African-American families in particular, and remain unequivocally committed to participation in the democratic process, as well as the constitutional right of the individual to exercise his/her freedom of association, assembly and of speech.

SCHOOL OF ENGINEERING
DEPARTMENT OF SYSTEMS AND COMPUTER SCIENCE

The Howard University School of Engineering will host a conference, "Empowerment through Technology," on October 14 & 15, 1995. The conference will convene successful scientists, engineers, business persons, financiers, entertainers and students from across the United States for the purpose of utilizing science and technology to economically empower African Americans. The conference will be held during the weekend when one million African Americans from across the United States will assemble at the National Mall in Washington, DC.

Specific goals for this conference are to develop plans for accomplishing within 1 year:

- Formation of at least 3 technology related companies providing commercial products and services.
- Submission of at least 7 Small Business Initiative Research (SBIR) proposals.
- Fund constructing a new HU School of Engineering Building that would serve the minority community as a national resource for developing technical expertise, performing state-of-the-art research and nurturing technology related businesses.

Invitations have been sent to national technical, business, financial, entertain and student leaders. The exact agenda will be determined from their response.

Vitamin C may help alleviate common cold

By Althea Dix

The daily fall draws nearer; many seem to be failing to prepare to the waiting cold. Many of today's people are having trouble with the common cold. Considering the body's need for vitamin C, at least by now you believe in vitamin C. You should be taking vitamin C.

Mark Wickram, a senior political science major in a strong supporter of vitamin C as the cure for the common cold. "I take vitamin C everyday because the body can't use vitamin C, therefore, it has to be replaced," he said.

Mike Wickram, a senior political science major in a strong supporter of vitamin C as the cure for the common cold. "I take vitamin C everyday because the body can't use vitamin C, therefore, it has to be replaced," he said. Many smokers take vitamin C when they feel a cold coming on. "Cigarettes are bad for your health. Not just bad for your lungs," she said.

'Ve also need vitamin C to fight ailments with simple home remedies,' she said. It's important to remember the body and its ability to fight infections before taking prescription medications. "It's a viral infection. Drink fluids and relax. You don't treat it with antibiotics," Ralph said. "Some people use antibiotics for viruses because they have bacteria with which the infections are treated. But this is incorrect. You don't treat it with antibiotics," Ralph said.

"The virus is different from a bacteria. You don't have to take a shot or take antibiotics, you just need to follow the instructions." Ralph said.

Do you feel Howard University administrators display poor attitudes toward students?

Nyasha West
Junior
Accounting
Queens, N.Y.
Yes, I think we would be treated better if we attended White schools.

Thomas Noy
Junior
Experimental Studio
Cleveland, Ohio
Yes, especially the cashiers. Of all the people in the 'A' building who should be happy to get your money, the cashiers have the worst attitudes. They throw your I.D. at you and look at you as if you were crazy.

Marquita Woods
Sophomore
Physics
Dayton, Ohio
I wouldn't say it is a poor attitude. They always give you the run around — for example, the people in student accounts don't treat us like we should be treated. It's hard to get a direct answer.

Fred Cockfield
Senior
Jazz Studies
Florence, S.C.
I haven't been mistreated all the time. They gave me a lot of attitude my freshman year. Since then, I've learned to get around them.

Doric Gladney
Sophomore
Computer Science Engineer
Ben Harbor, Mich.
They give you the run around, so they won't have to deal with you. They act like we need them when really they need us, because without us they wouldn't even have a job. They are so irresponsible because they lose your paperwork.

Jamillah Gabriel
Sophomore
Computer Science
Lancaster, Calif.
When you go to any office in the 'A' building, they act like they don't like working with people or like doing their job. They act like we're supposed to know what to do and who to ask, when actually that's their job. Although, this year is better than last year.

Ashon Rodriguez
Sophomore
Marketing
San Diego, Calif.
They don't give students the respect they deserve. Students are the most important part of the University, and they treat us like we are inferior and almost child-like.

Marvin Pitts
Freshman
Business Management
Milwaukee, Wisc.
When I first got here, I went through a lot to get my ID card and meal card. They act really shady toward us.
