Goodbye Validation
Stickers, Hello New ID Cards

BY CHARRISE JACKSON
Art&Campus Editor

Students no longer have to hover over our mailbox or wait in long lines for a validation sticker each semester because the process has been done away with the old system and replaced with a self-service system which the Class of 2008 were the first to attend.

Along with the official Howard passageway Big Plan to all students, the latest sticker matter that easily identifies new students is the new Howard University student ID card. Unlike the Capstone card given to freshmen in previous years, the 2004 ID vertic card given to students in previous years, the 2004 ID is vertical with blue artwork and an information chip that allows the card to be used to be expanded, and new features have been added.

"I like the new IDs that my class got," said freshman Melany R. Holmes, "the cards have a lot more color and they are smaller." Without understating the perks and fresh look of the new card, return students should not expect to receive the new IDs in the near future even if their Capstone cards are lost or stolen. For some students, getting one of the new IDs is a priority.

"I'm excited to receive my ID because I am not going to Howard University; it will take at least two years for every-"

Goodbye Validation
Stickers, Hello New ID Cards

BY CHARRISE JACKSON

The Hilltop's effort to fulfill its role as the student voice of Howard University has not gone unremarked," said English junior, Melissa "M" Betshe from the Hilltop. Pressed by the Princeton Review, this year's 2004 student ID card is vertical with new features and a fresh look.

Because The Hilltop is produced completely by students, the popularity of the paper is based solely on the work of The Hilltop staff.

"This ranking did not just pour," said Jennifer Davis, dean of the John H. Johnson School of Communications. "It happened because of the students who work so hard to get the paper published every Tuesday and every Friday, and always on time. This University is making great strides. It's a good time to be at Howard.

The first place acknowledgment was largely the product of The Hilltop staff of the 2004 school year. "The staff and I really put our lives into this service for the students," said one student. "It's been a lot of work, but it's been an amazing experience."

"I'm proud of them, but I'm expecting even greater things in the future. The best must continue to rise."

The paper's recognition also impacted students who read the paper each week.

"It makes me even more proud to go to Howard," said Jabari Barber, a sophomore business management major. "My peers' accomplishment speaks to the type of work that Howard has to offer. I have always liked how informative The Hilltop is. The paper won us, as students, a place to express our opinions."

The Hilltop was not the only faculty of University life included in Princeton's Review for 2004. Painting during Friday's faculty's signature at Howard University, Pamela Abraham, Howard地方 succed in the category of "Long Lines and

Mugging at Shaw Howard Metro

BY ROBIN DAVIS AND JONI C. GILLIAM

Police officers said that three African-American males mug the victim, an unidentified male. One bystander became aware of the crime in progress, the suspect fled the scene. They ran through the 8th Street entrance to the Howard-Shaw Metro Station. They then descended the track into a field, a few yards away from the entrance station. The suspects, local area residents, are now in police custody.

This incident, along with others in the past, may cause Howard students to change their views on security for the Howard campus and surrounding areas.

Following the robbery, sophomore biology major Portia Adams, exited the metro station. The suspects, local area residents, are now in police custody.

We create this opportu- nit y to bring faculty together from across the campus," said English professor. If students are to be true scholars, they must be true scholars.

For the many students who hate to be "true scholars," it's a good time to be at Howard University.

Howard Builds Research Center

BY CHARRISE JACKSON

University faculty will soon have the capstone research center as Howard is preparing to open the Howard University Research Building (HURB I). The facility of the kind in Howard's campus, or any historically black college.

Across from the Shaw/ Howard metro stop, the 5,000-square-foot building. Formerly a student home, now houses Howard's latest addition. The HURB I is scheduled to open in late September or early October. (HURB I is a major achievement of the University's Strategic Framework I. and II. funded by University intern, President and Chief Academic Officer Robert L. Care, Ph.D.

His absence will be felt greatly, and the university is working to find a replacement.

Transfer Students Convene

Shark Hampsey, the university's associate provost, welcomed the students to the event.

He expressed his excitement for the future of the university and its students.

Several students shared their experiences with the group.

Their stories highlighted the importance of support and community in the transfer student experience.
May 17 - Bill Cosby quoted a debate on the state of black America when he spoke out against the Bible that placards that many believe condone the death of homosexuals, directly confronting the gay community of the University of California in Berkeley. Cosby spoke about the lack of parenting within the black community and why parents need to take more responsibility for the actions of their children.

James died of natural causes in August after complications from these actions.

Supreme Court voided all same-sex unions, ruling that the city's mayor Gavin Newsom stepped film analyzing President Bush's abilities for the actions of their children.

There's no guarantee for housing for transfer students so far.

The new cards will not be in the system has been laid to rest.

The transfer of Iraqi power to Iraq is not a priority.

The university is still in the process of moving ahead, technical problems and access and have more features.

Because the new ID cards are being set up in a separate database than the Capstone system, any student will be trained very well, it will still be our job for our politically-minded students.

Graduate students voted for us, and we intend to stick to what we said during our first term.

We know that as the year goes on, different student organizations will be more communication with the administration and they should keep report student leaders.

We have had the privilege of serving people's staff and serving as the president and vice-president of the [College of Arts and Sciences]. We realize that there is a lot more we can do.

Marry has implemented a number of initiatives to increase diversity at the law school, including creating a diversity and inclusion committee, hiring more diverse faculty and staff, and expanding the law school's pipeline programs for underrepresented students.

Marry believes that diversity and inclusion are essential to the success of the law school. He is committed to creating a welcoming and inclusive environment for all students, faculty, and staff.

The law school is on track to transform itself into a more diverse and inclusive institution, thanks to Marry's leadership.
Republics are Looking to Their Past Leaders

BY KEVIN HARRIS

Next week, Republicans from across the country will assemble at the Madison Square Garden to lay out their platform and introduce their presidential nominee, George W. Bush to a national audience.

"Much had been written about the Bush administration's failure to deliver on its campaign promises," said John Kerry, the Democratic nominee. "But the real story is how this administration has failed to deliver on its promises to the American people."

The Republicans are looking to their past leaders for inspiration.

Barack Obama's record, particularly his African-American background and his love for the arts, has been a source of inspiration for many in the Republican Party. Southern Democrats, alienated by the war on terror, and the Bush administration's做法 have thus bolstered the party's standing within the African-American community.

Kerry has also been inspired by the leadership of President John F. Kennedy. Kennedy's record of progressivism, the way he handled the Cuban Missile Crisis, and his commitment to civil rights have all been sources of inspiration for Kerry.

The Republicans are looking to the example set by Lincoln for inspiration.

No politician has been more admired by the Republican Party than Abraham Lincoln. Lincoln's example of leadership, his ability to unite a divided nation, and his commitment to freedom and equality have all been sources of inspiration for the Republican Party.

Bush's Condemn Swift

Bush Ad's came under fire in the primaries, with many voters questioning the ethics of the ads.

Kerry was awarded the Silver Star and every other medal. I'm asked by reporters if he was an appropriate candidate for the presidency.

The Washington Post reported that Bush's remarks condemning the ads were not sufficient. "Condemning all the ads was the right thing to do," Bush said. "We're going to continue to make sure that those ads are not run.

Democratic Senator Kerry's military background is being highlighted, as he served in Vietnam and was awarded for his service.

"Senator Kerry's military service was admirable and he ought to be recognized for that," Bush said. "But the truth is, the swift ads are the only reason those anti-Iraq ads are even getting attention.

The Swift Boat Veterans group has been influential in the campaign, particularly in swing states like Ohio and Florida.

"They are trying to mar the image of our campaigns," Bush said. "The truth is, they are just trying to mar the image of Senator Kerry.

Some Say Kerry Brought Controversy on Himself

Kerry's handling of the伊拉克 war has been a source of controversy.

"Kerry passionately shares his past military experiences," Bush said. "But he also shares his views on the war, and those views are not consistent with the views of the American people.

The Race War Against Terrorism

BY MAXINE MOFFETT

Everyone under the red and white sign were left blue staring at the stars with gnashing teeth. News were spread into mind's reading, which was tangible and real.

Some have implied that there is a significant difference between Iraq and terrorism, but this is not the case. The two are closely linked.

Iraq is a country that has been devastated by war and instability, while terrorism is a tactic used by the enemy to achieve its goals.

The difference lies in the fact that Iraq is a nation-state, while terrorism is a tactic used by groups or individuals.

Iraqis... We are aware that the Iranians... The World Trade Center and the Pentagon... America was left to ask, "What do we do now and who is to blame?"

President Bush answered with the war against terrorism. "The Iranians... The World Trade Center and the Pentagon... It was a terrorist attack."

The Iraqi Soccer Regime Ends With Paraguay 0-3

BY KEVIN JOHNSON
Contributing Writer

A thousand miles across the globe, members of the Iraq soccer team at the Athens Olympics are being inspired by the "your destiny lies in your hands" principle.

In spite of Tuesday's 0-3 loss to Paraguay in the semi-finals, they are one step away from an improbable trip to the medal podium. With a win in the third place match, the Iraqis could become the first athletes from their country to win a medal since Nabil Shalabi won a weightlifting bronze in 1960 during the Rome Olympics. This piece of good news has served as a morale booster for the war-ruined nation of Iraq.

The fact that the Iraqi soccer team even qualified for the Athens Games remains a remarkable achievement. They qualified with a win, just three months after the International Olympic Committee, following a nine-month absence, reinstated the country. Two months after qualifying, the team's German coach, Berno Stange, resigned because of safety reasons and was replaced by his assistant and former Iraqi player, Amin Hamad.

To compound their problems, the team had virtually no funding and could not play games in Iraq due to the war. With their recent giant-killing
Olympic Athletes Told to Suppress Their Desire to Gloat

Several athletes who have qualified for the Olympic Games in Athens suggested on Tuesday that they suppress their desire to gloat if they win a medal at the Games.

"The Olympics are not just about winning," said one athlete. "They are also about the spirit of the Games." Another athlete added, "Winning is not everything. It's just what you do after you win that counts." The athlete went on to say, "We understand that there are others who might be disappointed if we win." The athlete then paused and added, "We're just trying to be respectful of our opponents." The athlete concluded by saying, "We're just trying to enjoy the experience of being here and representing our country."

Our View: They should know that they're being held to an infallible standard of what is and isn't acceptable and make sure they never do anything to come close to aindi.

Elected officials often practice nepotism, sleep with interns and make decisions we don't want them to make any day, but only a few are simply enough to get caught. Instead of entertaining front-page scandals, we'd much rather see someone getting the job done.

We wonder if the notion of the first African American First Lady doesn't give us a glimpse of what we need to turn it into a place that's black and unique about her.

The Curl Revolution

KAREN DOMARASKY

It begins with a four inch out, maybe more. It was a shoulders-length bob I tried to make look more 1980s, since I was 19 years old this year. Even at age 32 people think I am still in my teens.

But coming because too much to handle so I decided to cut off the perm. With each strip of my hair falling to the ground without a sound or a whoop.

I thought of my hair as a cage I could not escape from without. But now that she-sheds that has snatched my true self away, I am contemplating who really am.

As my most vulnerable times, it fell over my eyes like a curtain. But now that she-sheds that has snatched my true self away, I am contemplating who really am.

I fully exposed a head full of natural hair that is brushing from age 20 years, shaving the world true self.

Hair is everything to Black folks. We press our hair to straighten and hope it will grow.

We spend money on products that don’t work to slide in our hair in the pre-perm condition.

Taking the Gift of Howard Back to Nigeria

MAISU BRANCH

I was born in Nigeria. I felt when I was six for England, mostly swimming in the sea when I was 13 and attended school here.

I have always been a Nigerian and my roots and ties to my country are very strong. However, with my experiences in Howard University, I felt that I was 13 and attended school here.

As a Nigerian that attended Howard, I must say that it was one of the best experiences of my life.

New things were happening.

President H. Patrick Hogevoet was one of the first people I met and the president of the first Howard University President’s Council.

The Nigerian who attended Howard, I must say that it was one of the best experiences of my first Howard experience;

Today, the Nigerian who attended Howard, I must say that it was one of the best experiences of my first Howard experience;

I hope we can use this gift to inspire and empower other Nigerian students to succeed in Howard University.

Howard had its challenges, challenges that student government leaders encountered as they worked to improve to the best we can.

To future graduates of Howard, understand that you will soon begin to reap the benefits of what you have just endured.

One of the most humorous things about Howard is that there is so much that just that you can't do on this campus.

The unfortunate rule is that many students take those Howard-exclusive tendencies and try to carry them over into the real world.

At a business management major, I have gone through the school of Business' interview program where students are required to wear suits.

It is clear that this appearance training does not get you far beyond just wearing a suit.

Though it may seem hard to believe, the most mimetic aspect of your appearance can make or break your interview.
