Students Shine in Ford Focus Talent Drive

BY LAUREN STEPHENS

Students had 30 seconds to display their talent in various areas to win Ford Focus Talent Drive in the Valley Wednesday which is a poetry and dance among others.

They also entered a contest from a song pick to a Ford Focus.

Supported by Ford in conjunction with the Howard University Student Association, the event was one of the schools chosen as a step back of its mission and direct relationship with Ford Motor Company.

"Howard is a great school," said Scott Collection, of Custudins Magnet and Lawrenceville Magnet."We appreciate the exposure of the school and the students of Howard," he said.

The event was a part of the school's Homecoming, which was promoted and assisted by students who are a part of the student committee.

"We were trying to add new stuff and we figured that since nothing was going on Wednesday that would be a good thing to have in the middle of the week," said senior Brandon Davis, Operations and Manager for the Homecoming Steering Committee.

Students were given less than a minute to showcase their talent in the valley Wednesday during the Ford Focus Talent Drive.

"We really tried to publicize it a lot and we're getting good turn out so far," Davis said.

The flow of talent was stagnant at times. Some students who did perform were hopeful about the possibility of winning the grand prize, a trip to Hollywood for two to attend a Hollywood movie premiere, a meeting with a casting agent, and the chance to appear in the short documentary being filmed by the presence.

Students Wait and Wait For Football Tickets

BY TONI AKINMUSIRU

BY JOH GILLIAM

Howard graduates LeTisha Gomer and Marquita Edwards showed their winning piece before the official show began.

Their performance was to attend the show with friends, Howard Williams, who struggled the crowd with his contagious humor. He joked about your rights and voting issues during a pocking fit at the few white audience members.

This was Williams' second performance at Howard and despite the few audience members who did not find him funny, his act, "Wack Jokes," says he enjoys his shots at Howard.

"I know that people are upset that they will not be able to vote due to lack of U.S. citizenship but encourage all those that can vote to do so," he said.

Someone should take advantage of this opportunity to encourage our young black students on campus and social science major Rasheeq Naji, a national honoree, said, "The best way to go about it is to vote ."

Prof. Smart Discusses Need for Self-Affirmation

BY TAHMIA BRADLEY

For Howard University Spanish professor Ian Isodore Smart, the Supreme Court's support of affirmative action in a recent case is not an end to the battle for civil rights. "Some of the greatest problems with regards to affirmative action are the ones that have to do with the very definition of affirmative action," said Smart. "I think we have to be careful about how we define affirmative action and how we implement it." According to Smart, affirmative action should not be seen as a "quick fix" solution to the problems of discrimination and inequality. Instead, it should be viewed as a long-term strategy for promoting diversity and inclusion in all aspects of American society.

Students Seek To Restore Community Leadership

BY JORDAN COLLERT

The Talented Tenth feels their need for leadership. "A number of us felt as though the leadership structure was lacking within the African-American community," said Glenn Allen, the president of the organization. "Some of us were really hoping that there was a lack of leadership with regards to specific issues."

"I think we have to our community as Howard University School of Business are the only schools offering online courses. For a more detailed look at the other schools offering online courses, please refer to the following article:" www.largeneed.com."

Online Courses Offer Flexibility, Convenience

BY NICOLE REED

With the help of Blackboard.com, a website through which many online courses are offered, students at Howard University have the opportunity to attend classes virtually and gain the benefits of traditional education. "I've been able to conduct a Teacher/Staff Appreciation Ceremony and Women's Appreciation Awards here at Howard," said Glenn Allen, Ledge managing editor. "We want students to take advantage of this opportunity in order to learn about their community and the world beyond.

AIDS is real and it's something that affects people all over the world. For example, one of our issues this year was the problem of HIV/AIDS in Africa. The magazine is now considering doing a special issue on this topic in order to raise awareness of the problem.

Valley Serves As Stage for Students

TALENT, from Campus A

"I heard the noise so I decided to see what was going on," said junior administration of justice major Yolanda Glass, who performed an original poem entitled Masquerade. "I am actually from California and I have been stuck here for a year because I have no money to go home so any free trips are wonderful."

In addition to the performances on stage, students in the audience were able to win free tickets and other prizes through a drawing about union and movies. There was also a station setup where students were able to play Eminem on Sony televisions. "I would rather listen to music and movies rather than the talent drive because this is where my talents are mostly concentrated," said Hill, a senior radio personality.

African-American and African and African-American performance was honored by judges as being the best. "I think it's really good that our school is so well-regarded that major companies want to come to Howard and give these types of opportunities to Howard students," said Powell.

Many students who were passing through the valley stopped momentarily to observe the talent displayed on stage, but were not impressed enough to stay for an extended period of time. "It's a great idea, but it needed to be publicized better," said junior psychology major Lonnell Powell. "There needed to be more than just comedic performances."

The Ford representatives were also promoting the X-Plan, which gives students and recent graduates at participating universities the opportunity to receive discounts on the purchase of cars from various manufacturers including Volvo, Land Rover and Lincoln. "There are a lot of options in the area. Students were pleased with Tuesday night's performance, as they trickled out of the auditorium still laughing at some of the antics they had just seen. The show's coordinator, Latasha Hill, was most excited with the show's outcome. "I am glad all of my hard work has a positive outcome and I can bring everyone together," said Hill, a senior legal communications major.

A Moment in Howard's History: Female Dorm Residents Face Discrimination

"That's a difficult thing to obey your cloth­ing, money has to flow to have the appropriate style. I try not to fall out of the fashion moves," Curtis said.

Twenty-year-old Curtis began mak­ing her own clothes at the age of 12. She always had a passion for art and fash­ion design. Born and raised in D.C., her blo­co footprint, a tailor, taught her most of her sewing techniques. She studied art design, her freshman year at the Coro­nan College but dropped out to attend the Blue Moon Fashion Factory business.

"On the hardest thing about sell­ing your own clothing is determining the right price," Curtis said. "It's all about quality instead of quantity. I spend a lot of time on making my clothing and I bet my time on making the clothing and the time I spent on making the clothing is the time I spent on making projects. I'm pretty good at what I do, but I think I should have studied more for it. It was some stuff on that I didn't know much about.""}

"The Real HU" or others that read, "Rock and Roll is cool and the spirit of this university the right to deny programs they found unaccept­able." Student admissions apparently keep the interest of the East Campus Towers. 'They are capable of killing responsibly with high amounts of freedom,' she said. "I don't think the students should have oversight violation, but upon appeal," said Harris. "College is a part of growing up and we have to handle adult situations."

Fashionable Trends for Homecoming

BY SIMONE STEPHENSON
Contributing Writer

Howard students are known not only for their superb academic achievements, but also for their extraordinary appreciation for fashion. This year's Homecoming is sure to be another year of the latest fashion trends.

"We always have to wonder how people will work this year's Homecoming," remarked Erica Lee, senior majoring in Theater. The musical theater major added, "The look for the females will probably be simply tailored, as usual." Ann Franklin, a senior political science major, said, "Purses, Addias, and all kinds of school shoes are going to be in this year, as are Express jeans for men."

Aside from clothes, hairstyles will definitely make or break the look. "The Sass (the fusion of the 'Saying' in the face and the spiky look) in the back will definitely be ending a heavy appearance on homecoming this year," said Whitney Therien, a freshman political science major. Freshman broadcast journalism major, Zama Walker agreed, "The bump in the front is very bold look, but every other girl on this campus is rocking it, so I'm sure we'll be seeing a whole lot of this same look for tomorrow."

"I think girls will be wearing their hair down, looking neat," and Gems Elis, a sophomore international business major, "and you know how girls have those little tiny things you know? Elis confidentially added. After a confused silence, Whitney chimed in, "Sneakers..." trying to clarify what those so-called, "sneakers things" actually were. "Snatch-one percent of the guys in Washington D.C. have sneakers, so I'm sure there will be a lot of those in homecoming. The other one percent of guys either have trends or fades (short haircuts)," Walker said.

"Many students seem to be trying to blend the looks of their favorite celebrities. Either, in a big bonanza," Walker said. "Either, a well-known R&B singer is known to his fanatical fans, muskets and zip-up sport jackets or Blakes. "Artists such as Beyonce, Kattie West, Alicia Keys and P. Diddy are all likely trendsetters this year," Therien said. "Everyone is wearing that pink, like Can't lose, a guy should never, ever wear pink. Ever." Elis concluded.

The Yard is where I plan to get my fashion inspiration," Therien said. Videos, fashion magazines and fashion runways may get their inspirations from Howard University students because of the variety it looks, it will be another great Homecoming. There will be a lot of fashion, haircuts, and hairstyles that you will see, the image, to and wide pants, masks, sneakers and "hemp-shoes," on the females. As far as clothing trends, it will be a variety of original and unique styles in Howard's campus on any other day.

Dear Lauryn...

Dear Lauryn, It’s The Hilltop’s new advise column aimed toward college students and written by a voice that understands. Lauryn, the voice, gives intelligent advice with a dash of urban edge that leaves the reader entertained yet informed. This column tackles issues of the average college student, including money troubles, sex, grades, parents and dating.

Dear Lauryn, I have always been a high achiever, so it’s no surprise that I am in the honors program of my school and am taking a full course load. Recently, I have been truly stressed out with terrible headaches. When I tell my parents they say “Don’t you understand complaining.” I really want to drop at least one class but would die from my parents’ disappointment. Lauryn, what should I do?

Can’t Disappoint Them

Lauryn

Dear Can’t Disappoint Them,

It is the time-unusual question: should thy follow thy parent’s will or thy own? Ask curtail not by crowning Disaster, it’s an even finer question when you know thy parents have geared Lorenzo at heart. Through extensive research I have discovered that will prepare you for “whether Howard is strongly encouraging” of thy physiological changes are clearly showing that you are on overload. I know you want to please the MD, but they don’t care on the sweep of passing out. Do pass and take a look at your priorities. Dropping one class does not make you a quitter, it makes you wiser as thy clearly assess what you can and cannot handle. But don’t get so comfortable to the point it is unnecessary for you to include some career goals. Yes, your parents had something to do with your existence, but this is thy life. Live it in a way that is healthy for Lauryn.

Grad Trustee Discusses Position

BY MIESHA DARROUGH

Graduate Trustee Miesha Darrough of Howard University.

Upon election to the position of Graduate Trustee, I have been asked questions regarding how things are going with the Board, what the Board members like and do the Board members allow you to speak?

Friday, Sept. 24, I was finally able to answer the question on how many of you have posed. On that day, Howard University’s Board of Trustees celebrated its 137th opening convocation and thanked the efforts of many university officials and Mr. Stan O’Neal, the event turned into a very meaningful and motivating experience. In conjunction with opening convocation, the Board of Trustees officially met for its first set of meetings for the year, and I am happy to report that the Board is comprised of sincere and serious individuals who all bring unique skills and valuable knowledge for the purpose of making decisions that help to further the mission and vision of Howard University.

During these meetings, interested with a group of individuals who are not very successful but more importantly, had a deep love and appreciation for Howard University. There was no atmosphere of intimidation, there were no arrogant or big ego. It was a very warm and inviting aura from each member. Many of the Board members are alumni of Howard many have family members who attended Howard, and just being involved in the Board initiative has increased my love for Howard. As a result, when decisions are made on any topic they are made not only by student trustees and faculty trustees but also by general trustees who understand the uniqueness of Howard. Weekly Budget

Howard University. Now, I am allowed to speak or am I simply there so that it can be said that the graduate students are represented? The expectation is that every participant especially the student trustees because we bring the students’ perspective included on university officials. Effective governance occurs when the collective knowledge of all Board members is brought to bear on every decision, and the decision-making process occurs when the collective resources necessary to make important decisions.

Thank you for your time and attention and please be on the lookout for the upcoming Trustee Roundtable on November 12, which will be sponsored by the student trustees. Miesha S. Clinton Made His First Appearance Since Undergoing Bypass Surgery This Week as He Campaigned for Sen. Kerry in Miami on Monday and is Expected to Campaign in Nevada Today. From His Home in New York, Clinton Spoke to the Press About His Health.

Clinton wasted little time attacking John Kerry (D-Mass.) in the Nevada debate. Kerry was spending $10 million of new evidence in Nevada today. From his home in New York, Clinton spoke to the press about his health.

Kerry has been campaigning hard to secure support from the black community. Though he rarely discusses his faith publicly, Kerry has opened up in recent days. The tradition of religion, both black and white, of endorsing political candidates, some are hesitant to do so. If "I'm not allowed to endorse a candidate, my church may lose tax status," said Rev. Robert Harris, who asked what he would endorse this year. Harris, who is the senior pastor at Church United, also said he doesn't believe "it's the church's position to endorse candidates because the church will lose its prophetic edge."

"It's like trying to feed a fish in a darter stream," Harris said. The reverend went on to say that even though ministers may have a significant influence on people's thinking, "everyone in my congregation is going to make the decision on their own for themselves." Brittna Jackson, a junior broadcast major, agreed and said that if he endorsed candidates, "I may get unemployed," she said. "I don't know what he would do."

Others disagree and feel that ministers do not necessarily have to endorse candidates running for office. "If the pastor endorses candidates, he may or may not have said from the pulpit," said Rev. Brittna Jackson. "I don't have my own sheep," said Jackson.

In a game surrounded by the glee and glow of homecoming, the Howard University Bison talk on the loud Norfolk State Spiritfan in a chest that will be filled with good, generous and student feature. The Bison, who are 4-3 on the season, were riding a 4-game win streak before the North Carolina A&T. Again, there was a game without the North Carolina A&T that was being played on a Friday night last week. The loss was a ground for a Howard side that was being pummeled for bad and the other teams that were playing against the team in good. The North Carolina A&T, which was being played on the best team in the nation, was being played on a Friday night last week.

Bison Look To Stay Strong At Homecoming

Homecoming Game Offers Many Choices For Attire

BY SONIA SUMMERS

Aside from high academic achievements, Howard students are known for their spirit and style. Not only do students look good at the club, but they look good in the classroom.

With the 2004 Howard homecoming gate approaching, it is only expected that Howard students will take the extra effort to look their best at the gate.

Students like Cassandra Cato, a sophomore broadcast journalism major, plan to look their best for sporting Howard gear. "I'm just wearing Howard gear, heels, and same blue jeans," Cato said. "I'm just putting the right clothes on!" Cato hopes everyone will show their school pride by wearing Howard gear. I would think most people would wear Howard paraphernal to the game to represent the school," Cato said. "I hope people don't wear less to the game. Besides, people should save their clothes for the step show.

The step show may be the only reason students do not sport Howard clothes to the game. Immediately following the game, the step show may not allow enough time for students to change clothes and arrive early to ensure a good seat. "I was going to wear Howard clothes, but I want to be prepared for the step show because I will not have enough time to go back to the dorm to change clothes," said Christian Spieler, a junior majoring in "Whatever!" Cato said. "I can't be something that looks good for both occassions."

Although the step show may suffer if not wearing Howard threads, the weather influences decisions as well. For Brian Jackson, a junior broadcast journalism major, the weather will determine whether he wears Howard clothing or dresses "30's" to the game.

"Quack!" a junior international affairs major, says students may not wear Howard clothing at all because they just do not care about it. In response to Bradley, Ashley Dennion, a sophomore spanish major, said, "Whatever!" Cato said. "It is because I do not have the spirit if there are no fans there. I felt the fans made the game." Cato said. "If there are no fans there, the game is not something I want to watch." Students say fans can be a source of energy for the team.

Many young men opt for dress shirts and fitted hats. However, wearing Howard colors wins every time.

Bison Prepare For 2004 MEAC Cross Country Championships

BY JANAE GRAY

While many of us will be enjoying fall foliage, the men’s and women’s Cross Country team will be preparing to represent Howard at the 2004 MEAC Championships. The meet is scheduled to take place in M.C. "The Night the Owls are Smarter" was broadcast on the Howard University Radio Network.

Coach Mark Mitchell has been leading the Bison to victories for years, but he still feels the need to focus on the starting line.

Tarsha Harris is the two-time defending MEAC Cross-Country individual Champion and a member of the two-time MEAC Cross-Country Champion Team.

A Year Later: A Tale Of One Game And Two Different Paths

BY ANYA ALEXANDER

Since the 16-14 victory over Florida A&M in last year’s homecoming game, the Howard University football players’ expectations are high as they face Norfolk State this Saturday.

"Playing a team like FAMU was a great challenge...the players were focused and we won a great victory over one of the top teams in the MEAC," Howard University Head Coach Rayford Perry said.

"Since the big muddle at Georgia State last year, FAMU has tried to upgrade their football program from NCAA Div. I-A status to I.A. We think of ourselves as a Div. I-A team now," junior tailback Devon Richardson during a press interview."That means we have to step our level of play, and we can’t be complacent," Perry said. "If we can’t compete with a team like FAMU, I’m not sure we’ll be up to the level of play we need to be.

"Everyone here wants to go where their talents are used the best," Richardson said. "We need to be realistic about what we can do and what we can’t do and focus on what we can do.

"The players are focused on the game and we have a lot of confidence in our team," Perry said. "We have a lot of talent and we need to use it to the best of our abilities."

Dance Theatre Brings New Flavor to D.C.

BY SHEA HENRY

In 1986, Robert Rothstein founded the Momentum Dance Theatre. As a professional multi-performance, implementation performance, training and performing arts to captivate and grow, the achievements are numerous and the impact is immense.

“Our mission is to present jazz, modern jazz, hip-hop and dance theater to wide, diverse audiences and to underrepresented populations,” Rothstein said. “Our performances also set an example for our colleagues and audiences.”

Rothstein began at age four. She trained at various schools in New York including the Clarke Center for Performing Arts in Harlem and the Alvin Alley American Dance Center. She then went on to choreograph in Chicago for the Alvin Alley American Dance Theater. Rothstein also has a background in clinical social work, which is currently on a break. Reeve’s Death Highlights Dangers of Bedsores

BY SHANAE HARRIS

Christopher Reeve, 52, who went into cardiac arrest at his home in Westchester County, N.Y., after developing a seri­ous systematic infection during treatment for a bed­sores, many fans were shocked to hear that bedsores could be the cause of Reeve’s death.

According to Dr. Phil Ivory, of the National Pressure Ulcer Advisory Panel (NPUAP) Washington, D.C., they are a problem that is more frequent than it really is, Jameson said.

To develop bed sores, one must have unbroken skin in an area that is subject to infection, and usually this infection can spread to other parts of the body through the bloodstream causing cardiac arrest. So the problem of a wound due to prolonged pressure on a particular point on the body.

In light-colored skin, it is important to look for darker areas while checking the skin regularly, Ivory said. "In dark-colored skin, it may be necessary to look for soft, reddened areas rather than redness."

This problem has become a rising issue in many nursing homes and centers for those with disabilities. "Just because they are common in these places does not mean that they are not quite serious however," Ivory said.

"Carol Stumpf, a massage therapist and manager of rehabilitation at the University Medical Center in Tucson, Ariz., says that bed-bound patients should move or be moved at least once every two hours, if not more often."

"I was surprised because I had no idea that bed sores could lead to such serious problems," Ivory added that things such as changing bedding, avoiding materials such as sheepskin to protect against friction, good nutrition and gentle massage are other methods to prevent bedsores.

"The nurse would turn her over and shift the direction that she laid to relieve the pressure. With her still affected by the stroke, movement of her body was hard, and so this was a fairly slow process that sounds easier than it really is," Jameson said.

"But nurses are serious conditions and should be taken as such. I think now that Christopher Reeve’s story will put them more forefront.

Black Schools Watering Down Graduation Requirements

This year, seniors at Xavier University will be able to work a little bit more than usual. The Academic Council has changed their curricular policy so that almost half of one required course during the last semester will be allowed to participate in graduation. The school cited the inconvenience for families preparing to come to graduation in as a reason for this new policy. This policy is definitely going to ease student's to get lazy, because they know it will be acceptable for them.

New D.C. Baseball Stadium Is a Waste of Money

The new baseball stadium is officially going to be built in order to welcome the Montreal Expos. DC officials have been competing with several other cities because the team's new home. They are bidding enough flick for the estimated $600 million required to make the Robert F. Kennedy Stadium baseball, according to The Washington Post. The construction will have the field, locker rooms, dugout, and stands ready for play by April 15, 2005. There was a set of work to be done and it will begin in December. Despite the many reservations RFK will undergo, a 4,600 million stadium will be built in Northeast DC by 2008. We are wondering why the RFK stadium won't be up by now after all of the money they will put into it. We are concerned about the justification that is inevitable amid African-Americans that might be option-less in a few years. Proponents of the stadium are saying that the new stadium will create economic growth into the struggling community. We worry that people will lose their money at the stadium instead of the community that it will, in theory, help. The cost of laying velour carpet while the stadium is built. The end result is that RFK stadium should be good enough after they fix it. Seems like throwing money out of the window all in the name of getting a base ball team. In the past, several teams have left us, so we understand the excitement the team would bring. DC's Its' been applied a multi-million dollar sta dium that money could be spent on in the D.C. public schools or in other criti cal areas. It seems wise like the priorities are way back-wards. There is little that we can really do right at this point since it is a done deal. We just wish it wasn't so expensive, and we regret to inform the Southeast community that some of them might have to start packing.
Howard's Not So Bad

MAYA NORTON

I have been ready to throw my phone into the wall as it has been ringing off the hook these past weeks. I am writing for Homecoming, and I am bringing four other girls. My friends call us, "(s)he's coming for Homecoming." My friends ask, "What's your hometown saying again? Are the tickets sold out? I know I'm not the only one getting calls from random high school acquaintances trying to get friendly with us, and I am just looking at the time of the year (they want to piggyback with you)."

We must admit that people are catching flights, making hotel arrangements, and rearranging off of work just to make it to the school we see everyday. We complain about recycling the same people at "Hawder parties," and talk about what could be another coast to witness the beautiful landscape, the something tight about it. We get annoyed. We get that homesick/school-miss the ghetto squirrels, the that Homecoming will probably never be the same. We take the "L" on school, you get a weird sense of instant appreciation are made.

It's funny because Howard is like that family member you undervalue their contributions to your life. An "ugly" family member who you used to think was a "family nuisance."
