Vendors Face Difficulties Despite Student Support

By ROBBY WHITE

Campus Editor

Four classes back to back and only time to grab refreshments. There is no time for McDonald's and the lines are long. The School of Business is the only place to grab a quick bite.

Her choice is a hot dog, a sandwich and a soda. She pauses and looks around the room, trying to figure out what to have.

If this were a vending machine, she would probably choose something that she could eat quickly. However, she chooses a hot dog, a sandwich and a soda. She takes a seat and looks around the room.

While she is waiting for her food, she notices that the students are very busy. They are eating, talking and laughing. She wonders if they are all hungry.

As she eats, she reflects on her decision. She wonders if she made the right choice. She wonders if she should have chosen something else.

She decides to wait until the next class to make a decision. She hopes that she will be able to figure out what to have for lunch.

Bread is a staple of many people's diets, and with good reason. It is a convenient and healthy food that can be easily stored and transported. However, some people may not be able to afford bread due to financial constraints.

Mark Sanders shows a T-shirt to a potential customer near the School of Business. He tells the customer that he sells the T-shirt for $10. The customer then asks him if he has any other T-shirts available.

Sanders then shows the customer another T-shirt with a different design. The customer then asks him if he has any other T-shirts available.

Speak Out! Speak Out! Speak Out!

The word "nigger" has been at the center of a recent debate sparked by a request by the NAACP for Merriam-Webster Inc. to change its definition in the Webster's Dictionary. The Hilltop asked students if they think "nigger" is offensive and whether the use should be discouraged.

My definition of nigger is an ignorant person. In past usage mainly was directed toward people of African-American descent. In today's society, however, I feel that its definition has broadened its base to encompass people of any ethnic origin who fit this definition. Personally, I don't think it should be redefined. It should be eliminated from verbal and non-verbal communication.

—Thaddeus Richbury, senior mechanical engineer major

It was a derogatory word defined by European Americans to put down African slaves. Presently, the word is used by way of Blacks greeting each other. But if a White person says it, it will have its harsh meaning. I think no one should use the word. I use the word, but I don't mean to. Young African Americans should think about what they're saying and find another word to broaden their vocabulary.

—Kizzle McKay, freshman psychology major

We have been stigmatized with that [lazy and ignorant] stereotype because of propaganda and the media. Nevertheless, I still don't agree with using the term even if we take out the negative connotations.

—Lamon Geddis, senior elementary education major

The word was created by White men to label our people because we were valued as low people. Today, we use it in a term of endearment, which is wrong. I know I won't use it for a while, but when I get around certain people I would start using it again. Overall, we need to be a little more conscious of the words that we choose to describe people and call ourselves.

—Camille Cornelle, freshman musical theater major

Georgia Avenue Holds Rich History

By Mike Brooks

Loretta Crier Haines, 71, can remember practicing the latest dances such as the Charleston. Every Sunday at midnight she would escape from the pains of work and listen to the music at the Howard Theater.

"I would not be seen at the theater unless I was decked out in my Sunday best," Gray said.

According to the Guide to Black Washington, "the Howard Theater was the oldest of the string of Black theaters known as the Chitlin Circuit." When people entered the theater, they were greeted by a greeter and usher who checked out tickets and directed people to their seats. Performers like Billie Holiday, Ella Fitzgerald, and Sammy Davis Jr. performed here.

"Although we were poor, we had a tradition," said C. R. Gibbs, a local community leader. "The theater was a family, a place where people could find assistance." She said, "This is par-ents who would hire excursion boats leading them to a neighbor's bucket to fill their needs.

"The community was like one big family."

Shelter Tries To Change Negative Images Of D.C.

By Q. Thompson Jackson III

Hilltop Staff Writer

Some, cemented smiles, rain, broken bottles and guns are images many people associate with the Southeast quadrant of Washington, D.C.

The Covenant House aims to change those negative perceptions attached to the area, said Lisa Gibb, public relations coordinator for the shelter.

"Traditionally people see the area as a no-go territory to get lost in," she said. "This is particularly hard for young people who are one of the first to reverse that tradition."

The shelter began as a place where people could work and find assistance. Women from the Covenant House conducted a survey to determine which shelter would be in the best interest of the community. The survey consisted of a shelter with houseless children roaming District streets, but it also pledged to their parents in the neighborhood that it was currently poverty and literacy.

The staff members of the shelter said their goal is to help increase academic and job opportunities throughout the city.

The Community Service Center is the main thrust of Covenant House, where children from across the city can get help with school work and life skills. The GED course is one of the many programs offered by the Community Service Center. Last year, 75 percent of all the students participated in their own educational programs.

Some young adults chose to continue their education at the completion of Georgia Avenue. During the late 60s and early 70s, African-American businesses began to spring, gradually changing the complexion of Georgia Avenue.

The Covenant House also provided a library where books and educational tools were available. Areas for study are available in the building.

Students Face Dilemma Regarding Hope Credit

By Reid Wright

All semester comes to an end, the spring break is coming in. And with that comes a price for college students: the tax on paying tuition when it’s due in December-until January in order to take advantage of the Hope tax credit.

While the Hope credit helps some freshmen and sophomore students, it does not apply to seniors, and graduate students. There will be a tax credit for upperclassmen students, and for graduate students that will be less generous to those taking Hope by July 1997.

So specialists say that there are some students and parents who need to consider if it makes sense to wait to pay the full credit. And if they do, they need to take certain precautions to receive the full credit.

The tax credit covers 100 percent of the first $1,000 in tuition and mandatory fees, and 50 percent of the next $3,000 for four-year schools. To get the full credit, a student's parent must make enough tax income but earn less than $80,000.

Many financial aid counselors say that making late payments is not a necessity. Students and parents should instead look into whether their Hope is high enough to make taking the credit worthwhile, or if the person that wishes to take the credit is a dependent in the correct tax bracket to receive the credit.

"Students waiting in line to see an account analyst in the Office of Student Accounts, Students discuss tuition payment with account analyst," said a source that said that he would not talk.

The Student Financial Services Desk, said Nash, did not talk. And so do the police.

The curator of the dictionary is, "More than eradicate it from the dictionary, we need to show them how serious it is," the students who said that he did not see it.

"You don't hear me call students of color to the room to see an account analyst, " he said. "I don't want to hear you call students of color to the room."

"I don't doubt that capitalization will stop at some stage but exploited all possible methods to have people buy products, he said. "They use it, a sixth sense, don't I doubt that the consumers would be the last ones to know and that capitalism would be the last ones to eat."

"I do think that there's a Sixth Sense even exists," Chelsea Norton, a freshman interior design major, disagrees with the claim. "I don't think that this phenomenon is said," she said. "That's a big problem, but if people own things, it's a big deal."
For many Kenyans, the biggest political issue today is not the need for constitutional reforms, but what they see as a lack of effective national policies.

The coalition group opposing the ruling party consists of some 20 different political parties, Kenya's political history is characterized by frequent power shifts, and the country has been ruled by 11 different leaders from a single political party.

In 1963, the People's National Congress was formed, and the Kenya African National Union was established in 1969.

The Supreme Court has once again set a precedent for the nation's schools, this time a precedent that is not without serious implications. The Court's ruling on the use of the term "nigger" is not a mere technicality but a significant indicator of the broader cultural and political landscape we are currently navigating.

The decision, which was reached in several cases, is rooted in the idea that the use of the term "nigger" is inherently offensive and violates the rights of Black Americans. The Court's ruling, however, was not without its critics, who argue that it fails to address the underlying social and economic issues that contribute to the continued use of such language.

The impact of this decision extends beyond the legal realm, influencing the way we communicate, the way we view ourselves, and the way we relate to one another. It is a reminder of the importance of language and the role it plays in shaping our understanding of the world.

In the wake of this decision, there is a need for continued dialogue, education, and action. It is crucial that we do not lose sight of the bigger picture and the systemic issues that are at the root of this debate.

Howard's Berlin Wall

The Age of Inclusion and Disenfranchisement.

The case issue that lurks beneath the surface.

The tragedy of the Black middle-class is that democracy's real opportunity is to help them build a fence around their campuses.

For some, the Berlin Wall was a symbol of the Cold War. For others, it was a symbol of the division between East and West. For Howard University, it was a symbol of the power struggle between the university and the local community.

The wall was a physical manifestation of the tension between the university and the city. It was a reminder of the challenges faced by Howard University in its quest to maintain its autonomy and control over its destiny.

The wall was also a symbol of the broader struggles faced by Black institutions of higher education. It highlighted the challenges of balancing the needs of the local community with the mission of the university.

In the end, the wall served as a reminder of the ongoing struggle for equity and justice in education. It was a reminder of the importance of collaboration and dialogue in addressing the complex issues facing higher education.

The wall's removal was symbolic of the progress made in the struggle for racial equity and justice in education. It was a sign of hope for the future of higher education and the role it plays in shaping the lives of all Americans.

The wall's demolition was a testament to the power of community and the importance of working together to create a better future for all. It was a symbol of the ongoing journey towards equity and justice in education.

By Erika Wurtman

Retired journalist Walter Cronkite introduced a Kennedy Center audience on Friday to the man they came to hear. Walter Cronkite, a veteran of CBS News, has covered virtually every major news event during his career.

The audience at the Circle of Members audience heard Cronkite discuss his career in journalism, which included covering the Vietnam War, Watergate, the assassinations of John F. Kennedy and Robert F. Kennedy, and the Iran-Contra scandal. Cronkite also talked about his experiences as a CBS News correspondent and anchor, as well as his role in the Watergate hearings.

Cronkite's remarks were in keeping with the Kennedy Center's theme of celebrating the arts by honoring the contributions of those who have made significant contributions to the world of entertainment.

After three losing seasons here at the Mid-Continent Conference, Mike Mcleese has a reason to feel excited about this upcoming season.

"We have players who will put Howard's program on negative about this upcoming season," Bell was a star player in the District's H.D. Woodson and will be expected to give the team a boost in the offensive line.

ShoW Improvements In New Season

Men's Basketball Team defeats Norfolk State Spartans

The Bison defeated the Norfolk State Spartans 72-58, improving their overall record to 5-0.

"It's a great win for us," Mcleese said. "This is the last home game of the season, and the seniors will have a great opportunity to say goodbye to Greene Stadium. Come out and give the boys a great sendoff."
Women's Tennis Team Awaits Second Season

By DERRICK S. EDWARDS

The women's tennis team will not see mid-season break to continue its mental and physical conditioning.

The team is waiting for the Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference round robin tournament to begin.

However, the tournament was the second most difficult for the team.

The first test was an individual performance event at the annual D.C. Metro Championships, which provided the Bison with the measure of talent of their fellow MEAC opponents.

Although the team dominates the Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference, it lost two matches against Hampton University and Florida A&M University.

It was scheduled to compete against South Carolina A&T State University and Delaware State, but the match was canceled due to weather conditions.

Reactions varied toward Howard's performance at the MEAC round robin, but one common theme was shared. Team members said they do not play up to the team's potential.

"Unfortunately, not," said Fernando Guzman. "It's under performance. We definitely have the skills to beat the competition. We just have to push our skills to the limit that they see us as the best.

"It was a very challenging tournament," said head coach Larry Seifried. "Playing in the Rolex tournament is one of the best we've had this year, and we can only improve on our results"

"We are a team that has a lot of talent," said head coach Larry Seifried. "We are a team that has a lot of talent."
