University Moves Forward with Recycling

Donovan Fox, a business pre-major in economics and Drew Hall resident, said he raised the issue of recycling in his dormitory during a recent residence hall council meeting. But his idea, Fox said, was met with empty faces.

"They didn't seem that interested," Fox said. "They just seemed like 'yeah, if you want to do something, go ahead,'" he said. Fox said he keeps a stack of papers to recycle, but discards with his canned goods. "I don't like throwing away newspapers and soda cans," he said. "I feel weird doing it."

When asked about the conflict between her statement and the students' experiences, Newman said she would not retract on the issue. She said one of her plans for promoting recycling is the creation of a competition between the dorms: "I want to have a competition between the dorms," she said.

"Recycling—or the lack thereof—has come in the attention of many on campus.

Thomas Mosely, a sociology professor, said he supports efforts to revitalize the University's recycling program. "I think it is something that needs to be addressed," he said. "That could cause a health problem." Dr. Mosely said the lack of recycling contributes to pests on campus."

HU Students Clean Georgia Avenue

By LYNN SIMMONDS

By JAMEY E. SPILLER

There is a possibility of a white majority in the District City Council due to a low voter turnout among the majority in the District City Council.

"I think the Council ought to reflect the making of the city," said Mayor Marion Barry at a press conference. "I'm not a black supporter. I'm not a white supporter. I'm not even a Republican supporter. I'm not a Democrat supporter. I'm just an American supporter."

Approximately 63 percent of District residents are black, and, after this fiasco, there may be disproportionate representation of blacks in the Council.

Barry has refused to support any of the white candidates in the Democratic primaries, in which Frank Slaton, 2, a black candidate, lost to Jim Graham, the white director of the Whitman-Walker Clinic. Another frustration occurred when, though there were eight black candidates for the position, white civic activist Phil Mendelson won the Democratic nomination for an at-large seat on the Council.

The Council has four at-large seats. Two of them are up for re-election in 1999. Another at-large seat, held by a white incumbent, is up for re-election in 1999.

"I'm not from D.C., but I like volunteering in the community," said recreation manager Khalil Burdett. "I'm just the person who's going to take the first step. I know we're making an impact!"

Four garbage companies provided free services for the Clean Up Day Waste Management Services, BPS, D.C. Department of Public Services and Urban Waste Management transported all the trash out of the area.

"I'm not from D.C., but I like volunteering in the community," said Khalil Burdett. "I'm just the person who's going to take the first step. I know we're making an impact!"

At U. Michigan, Revised Conduct Code Sparks Fierce Debate, Protests

By NANCY EINHARTE

The Daily Northwestern

EVANSTON, Ill.—A new student conduct code was unveiled last week, as the publicity surrounding the code’s passage overshadowed by rules and restrictions.

The current code, which was written in 1996, has been criticized by students and faculty for being too vague and not providing clear guidelines for disciplinary actions. The new code aims to address these concerns and provide a more comprehensive set of rules and standards for student behavior.

The code, which was drafted by a faculty committee, includes sections on academic integrity, conduct on the campus, and conduct off the campus. The code also includes provisions for due process and appeals, as well as a list of offenses and the penalties associated with them.

The new code is the result of a year-long process, which included input from students, faculty, and staff. The code was approved by the University’s Board of Trustees last week.

The new code is expected to go into effect in the fall of 2002, and will be implemented in phases over the next two years. The University is expected to hold a series of town hall meetings to discuss the code and answer questions from students and faculty.

The new code is the latest in a series of changes to the University’s conduct policies, which have been under scrutiny in recent years. In 1996, the University’s Board of Regents passed a new code that was criticized for being too vague and not providing clear guidelines for disciplinary actions.

The new code is expected to be applauded by many students and faculty, who have long argued for a more comprehensive set of rules and standards for student behavior. However, some students and faculty have expressed concerns about the code’s impact on free speech and academic freedom.

The University is expected to hold a series of town hall meetings to discuss the code and answer questions from students and faculty. The new code is expected to go into effect in the fall of 2002, and will be implemented in phases over the next two years.

It's past time that Howard University followed the lead of city government and instituted a comprehensive recycling program. Back from a nearly two year hiatus in recycling services, last week the District of Columbia resumed curbside and alley pickup of recyclable products. But on our campus, only two employees collect recyclable products from all of the buildings and dormitories. The 102,000 D.C. households that will be served by curbside recycling are far ahead of our campus buildings and dormitories. The 102,000 D.C. households that will be served by curbside recycling are far ahead of our campus buildings and dormitories when it comes to social responsibility, at least in the form of recycling trash, which would otherwise be sent to the dumps and incinerators.

An article in the Bethune Annex receptacles exist for recyclables, but instead they sit empty, the result of poor coordination. The University's agreement with an outside contractor, Recycle World, to pick up recyclables is a hopeful step in the right direction.

Too bad that recycling efforts to date have been so woefully coordinated, understaffed and unsustained as to be laughable. And that's a shame, because as hundreds of public service announcements have worked to inform even the most ignorant of public service, that our trash fills up the earth full of trash, which threatens to overwhelm our already overcrowded landfills.

Perhaps more importantly for the University's bean-counters, recycling pays. Get it, guys? Firms are willing to purchase our trash. It's time we stop tossing recyclables into the dumpster and trade them in for another kind of paper: the kind that bears the visage of dead presidents.

From Winfrey, A New Spin on Slavery

In "Beloved," the entertainment mogul brings to life Toni Morrison's Pulitzer Prize-winning novel, and takes a giant leap from television to the silver screen.

daytime television. The cameras and all the high-tech drama made entertaining.

In Beloved, the film adaptation of Toni Morrison's Pulitzer Prize-winning novel, Winfrey stars as Sethe, a runaway slave haunted by the ghosts of her children. Through her performance, Winfrey has brought to life one of the most powerful and poignant characters in American literature.

The physicality of slavery does not compare to the psychological, emotional and spiritual devastation of knowing that your life does not belong to you.

—Oprah Winfrey

In preparation for the role of Sethe, Winfrey subjected herself to an intense historical journey. She contacted a expert of slave memorabilia, a woman who has read too many books and essays daring to analyze the physicality of it.

"The physicality of slavery does not compare to the psychological, emotional and spiritual devastation of knowing that your life does not belong to you," Winfrey said.

The most difficult part of bringing Beloved to production was getting a good script that everyone could agree on, and finding a director who shared my vision," Winfrey said.

"I've yet to hear a black leader mention such a large issue that Native American tribes are suffering as much as African Americans have, and fervently support it," she added.

When I arrived at Cramton Auditorium last Friday, I was surprised to see very few students. Based on the articles I read in the past two months of The Hilltop, it seemed as though no one other than those with the last name Muhammad or Welch would support Farrakhan. I thought I would be the only one not wearing a HUSA pin on my lapel.

Farrakhan began calmly, but by the time he gathered his audience, he was shouting, waving his arms, and crying. He told us to stop the hatred of our people and join him in his cry for freedom.

If you can't get help, I say, 'well, let's not talk about what really happened.'

I was graphic, I say, 'well, let's not talk about what really happened.'

Students Cope with the Costs of Vegetarianism

BY ERICKA GOMOLKA

America's culture revolves on the plate...but not necessarily her vegetables. On a further note, and African student at Howard University, there are several vegan-friendly restaurants, health food stores and cooperatives. A someway about food is the most sensitive of all. A recent study found that Southeast Asians who became vegetarian due to health concerns were more sensitive to chemicals in food than those who became vegetarian due to religious reasons.

Say what you will about the pros and cons of being a vegetarian, but the bottom line is that vegans are often isolated from mainstream culture. They are often stigmatized for their dietary choices, and many face discrimination in the workplace and social settings. However, being a vegetarian is not without its benefits. Studies have shown that vegans tend to have lower rates of heart disease, stroke, and some types of cancer compared to non-vegetarians. Additionally, a vegan diet is generally lower in saturated fat and cholesterol, which can help to lower cholesterol levels.

Vegetarians do not necessarily lack nutrients and protein. In fact, a well-planned vegan diet can provide all the nutrients needed for a healthy lifestyle. However, it is important to ensure that a vegan diet is well-balanced and diverse to avoid nutrient deficiencies. Educating oneself about the benefits of a vegan diet and seeking support from a registered dietitian can be helpful in navigating the challenges of being a vegetarian.

In conclusion, being a vegetarian can be a rewarding and fulfilling lifestyle. However, it is important to approach it with intention and knowledge to ensure a healthy and sustainable diet. Whether you choose to follow a vegetarian diet or not, it is important to prioritize health and wellness in all aspects of life.

QUALIFY FOR A CUSTOMS CAREER

Usually, four years of college or three years of work experience, or a combination of both, will meet qualifications for an entry-level (GS-5) position. To qualify for a GS-7 grade level, you must have at least one year of specialized experience in a related field. Collegiate academic excellence or graduate education can also help fulfill requirements for a GS-7. Prior law enforcement or military service is a plus.

You need to be a U.S. citizen with a valid driver’s license and have the ability to successfully complete a thorough background investigation and medical and drug screenings.

You’ll be well rewarded with an excellent salary and overtime, promotion opportunities, specialized training, and Federal benefits. The hours can be long and there is shift work, but the overtime is well paid. Starting salaries for GS-5 range from $21,051-$22,377, and from $26,075-$27,717 for GS-7. Successful performers receive promotions to GS-9 ($31,897-$33,906). Additional promotion opportunities are available.

New Coach Brings Discipline To Team

By ERIN ADAMS

Howard University Men's Basketball team, for the past six years, had been uncoached in style as they constantly continued for their upcoming season.

The team worked five days a week in the weight room, put in six hours a day, spent 30 minutes and consistently trained around the clock. The team attached, along with their understanding evaluation, if they held their focus on constant practice in preparation for their first game on Nov. 14 at Loyola College.

Newly appointed Head Coach Keck Saulny, who has held previous coaching positions at New Orleans, Columbus, Indiana and North Carolina, wants to discipline the Bison as they try to capture the Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference (MEAC) title.

"We won't get us excited and losers won't get us down. We'll adjust improvements," said Saulny. "Regardless of the level, your attitude takes you a long way and you get what you accept." Saulny and the team have to learn to discipline themselves as they try to capture the Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference (MEAC) title.

Howard's quarterback Tod White completed 39 of 52 passes for 305 yards and seven touchdowns.

"Wins won't get us excited and losses won't get us down. We'll adjust improvements," said Saulny. "Regardless of the level, your attitude takes you a long way and you get what you accept." Saulny and the team have to learn to discipline themselves as they try to capture the Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference (MEAC) title.

The Bison played an aggressive game, which opened the door for many turnovers. The majority of the team members seem to have the same problem with their turnovers, which led to many turnovers.

IN MANY COMPANIES
IT TAKES YEARS TO PROVE YOU'RE MANAGEMENT MATERIAL...

WE'LL GIVE YOU 10 WEEKS.
Ten weeks may not seem like much time to prove you're capable of being a leader. But if you're tough, smart and determined, ten weeks and a lot of hard work could make you an Officer of Marines. And Officer Candidates School (OCS) is where you'll get the chance to prove you've got what it takes to lead a life full of excitement, full of challenge, full of honor. Anyone can say they've got what it takes to be a leader; we'll give you ten weeks to prove it.
