Biographical Sketch

Lieutenant Colonel Walter Howard Loving was most widely known for his organization of the Philippine Constabulary Band. Created in 1901 by the Enabling Act of the Philippine government (then under the aegis of William Howard Taft, Governor-General), the P.C. Band gained much acclaim almost immediately thereafter. The band performed at World's Fairs of the U.S. in 1904, 1909, 1915 and 1939; and in 1982 was still highly respected in the Far East.

Scope Note

The Loving papers span the period from 1872 to 1983 with the bulk of the materials covering his early musical and military intelligence work (1899-1925). It measures 1 linear foot in size. The papers include biographical data on the Colonel; newspaper clippings of the band's activities; programs, announcements, reviews of the band; and photographs and correspondence of the Colonel, his wife and others.

Of note among the correspondence is the military intelligence series, which consists of coverage of unrest among "colored" soldiers in the U.S. military and investigations into alleged subversive acts by the "colored" citizenry of the U.S. Among those investigated were A. Phillip Randolph, Chandler Owen and W.E.B. Dubois.

Also included in the Loving Papers are compositions written by the Colonel, including "Beloved Philippines" which has been quoted by Andy Razaf as having all the merits of a national anthem (Source: The Walter Howard Loving Papers, letter to Mrs. Loving from Andy Razaf, March 31, 1952.)
