Leader's Illness Raises Awareness of Prostate Cancer Among Black Men

By Jason E. Kuehn
Hilltop Staff Writer

Notes of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan was released from Howard University Hospital this week. After undergoing emergency surgery to attend a tumor mass related to prostate cancer.

"Farrakhan was first identified as a cancer diagnosis from the MRI scan," he explained. "His doctor performed surgery as soon as possible to remove the tumor."

"Farrakhan is in high spirits. He feels good. He looks good," Ahmad said. \n

High Court to Rule on Student

By April O. Turner
Hilltop Staff Writer

The Supreme Court agreed late last week to decide whether universities can use mandatory student activity fees to subsidize controversial groups or organizations. In an ideologically divided case, the court will decide whether a university's policy of paying a mandatory student activity fee to controversial groups violates the First Amendment.

In Wisconsin v. Burz-Bustamante, the court will consider whether a university's policy of paying a mandatory student activity fee to controversial groups violates the First Amendment.

The case, which involves the University of Wisconsin-Madison, has been closely watched by students and faculty members who have expressed concerns about the university's policy of paying a mandatory student activity fee to controversial groups.

The university's policy, which was adopted in 1993, requires all students to contribute a portion of their tuition to the Student Services Fund. The fund is used to support student organizations, including those that promote controversial views.

The controversy over the policy began in 1997, when the university's student government voted to use the mandatory student activity fee to support the Republican Party. The student government's action was challenged by a student who argued that the fee violated the First Amendment. The student, who was a member of the university's Republican Club, argued that the fee was used to support a political party and that it violated the club's rights to free speech.

The university responded that the fee was used to support all student organizations, regardless of their political views. The university also argued that the fee was used to support student activities, such as the university's Student Press, which is a non-political organization.

The case was heard by the court in 1998, and the court ruled in favor of the university in February 1999. The court held that the fee was not used to support a political party and that it did not violate the First Amendment.

The case was appealed to the court, and the court agreed to hear the case in January 1999. The court ruled in favor of the university in February 1999.

The court's decision in the case is expected to have a significant impact on universities across the country. The court has previously ruled that universities can use mandatory student activity fees to support student organizations, including those that promote controversial views.

Howard University Student Association (HUSA) President Catherine Anderson, a psychology major, announced at the annual HUSA Student Awards Banquet Thursday evening that the student government would host a Youth Summit this May. The summit will feature workshops, forum discussions, and engaging speakers. It is designed to educate and empower young people from the D.C. area, and particularly young African-American males.

The Summit is scheduled for Saturday, May 15. It will begin at 10 a.m. in the Howard University Blackburn Center.

"The idea came about from the Howard University Student Association," Anderson said. "The summit will provide an opportunity for children and youth to meet with leaders and network with professionals. It's a great chance to learn new skills and strategies that will help them become successful adults." Anderson explained that some of the goals of the Youth Summit will be:

- To provide a platform for youth to express themselves and their ideas.
- To promote the importance of education and academic achievement.
- To help youth develop life skills and strategies for success.
- To encourage youth to pursue higher education and career opportunities.

"We are very excited about hosting this event and believe it will be a valuable experience for young people," Anderson added.

The Summit will include workshops on topics such as:

- Health and wellness
- Career development
- Leadership and entrepreneurship
- Cultural diversity
- Personal and financial management

There will also be panel discussions featuring notable leaders and experts in their respective fields. Examples include:

- Dr. Angela Bass, Center for Community Engagement
- Sheree Alston, National Urban League
- Dr. Alvin Williams, Howard University

"These sessions will be dynamic and interactive," Anderson said. "We want to create an engaging and meaningful experience for our participants." The Summit will conclude with a keynote address by a prominent leader or speaker.

"We believe it's important to invest in the future of young people," Anderson concluded. "This Summit is a step towards empowering and transforming our youth into the leaders of tomorrow. We are looking forward to seeing a diverse and engaged audience and are excited to see the impact we can make together."
Student Rights at Howard

Do You Consider Louis Farrakhan to be the "Voice of Black America"?

Compiled By Eric Hall

"No, because he is in particular to the views of the Nation of Islam, which is only a part of black America. Besides, we are a diverse people with many different views."

-Nikolai Salem, Theater Arts, Sophomore

"Yes, he is the most prominent black leader, but he has not actually representated it of a national black voice."

-Jermaine Godd, Architecture, Fourth Year

Student Rights at Howard

Nearly a dozen speakers representing Native Americans, African Americans, and other groups, gathered the Howard University alumni to protest against the student fee in nearly 30 years.

"He's the most vocal and aggressive black leader in the country."

-Edward Carey, Business Management, Freshman

"Yes, I think he has too many different positions to lead a people."

-Shiklah Johnson, Architecture, Third Year.

Students at UW Refuse To Fund Certain Organizations

In 1996, three University of Wisconsin law students filed a lawsuit against the university's System Board of Regents in South- west Wisconsin, a segregated fees lawsuit. The case, which centers around the University of Wisconsin System Policy that ties a student activity fee to fund student organizations on the basis of sex, will be heard by the Supreme Court. Last fall, the Court of Appeals ruled that the policy was a violation of the students' First Amendment rights. Should students have the right to say which organizations receive money? The lawsuit, brought by Scott Southworth, states that students are not forced to pay for groups for which they have no interest or ideas.

Recently, Howard University increased its fee, a fee that has gone untouched for quite some time. The students here feel as though it was needed to order to improve campus organizations. Here, the money is divided between the organizations in a way that is considered to be a fair and equitable system of allocation.

Some students at the University of Wisconsin feel that although he is using this argument, claiming they should have the right to monitor where their money goes, and order that it needs to be spent as a necessary and perhaps unfair. And even that it needs to be spent as a minimum requirement of 820. That, as said by this lawsuit, will come the demise of literary societies, Star Trek clubs, Tree Huggers clubs and anything that is considered "dorky" by the mainstream student body. What will be left? Perhaps the Science Society of Fashion Club.

And that's wrong. It heralds the beginning of the end. Perhaps Southworth is a point: he wants to be able to choose where his money goes. But he— and we—also need to remember that that gay student paid the same fee. Southworth's lawsuit is being paid by his "University of America" club his friend the heterosexual is paying by his organization fee and free. That's fair. Students can choose which organization they wish to support. Every single student can be an organization. And if they don't let a superstar in because he is "race-sensitive," if they don't let a superstar in because he is not. And the school deems them enough of an athlete to receive their share of the money. And in athletics cases, a major factor is their athletic ability and how much money they can bring into the school with a winning record.
Graduating Doesn’t Measure Your Success

F. Michelle Simpson

There’s a certain set of questions that have been posed to me. Do you have a degree? Do you have a job? Have you moved on? And the answer is sometimes yes, sometimes no, but the fact remains that graduation isn’t the end of the road.

Some may argue that education provides the foundation for success. While this is true, it’s not the only factor. Many successful individuals have achieved their goals through hard work, determination, and a willingness to take risks. Graduation is a milestone, but it doesn’t guarantee success.

Attempting to quantify success through graduation rates and job placements overlooks the complexity of the human experience. People who have not completed traditional education programs have still found success in various fields.

There are individuals who have achieved remarkable accomplishments without a college degree. Surgeon and author Atul Gawande, for example, became a household name with his book “Being Mortal.” He is a true testament to the fact that education is not the only path to success.

Similarly, the story of Oprah Winfrey illustrates the idea that success can come from unexpected places. Despite facing significant challenges growing up, she went on to become one of the most influential people in the world.

The truth is, success is subjective. It’s about finding fulfillment and making a meaningful impact on the world around you. Graduation is a point of pride, but it’s not the final chapter.

So, if you’re looking to measure your success, consider what truly matters to you. Is it the feeling of personal growth and accomplishment? Is it the relationships you’ve built? Is it the ability to make a difference in the world?

Ultimately, success is a lifelong journey. It’s about embracing challenges, learning from experiences, and continuously growing and evolving. So, don’t let graduation define your worth or your potential. You have so much more to offer this world than a piece of paper can say.

Division of Fine Arts Presents Weekend Dedicated to Black Dance

Dedicated to Black Dance is an event that the Division of Fine Arts has presented for several years. The event is open to the public and is an opportunity for students, faculty, and alumni to come together and celebrate the rich cultural heritage of African Americans.

Susan Stuart, made it her priority to be a part of our lives while attending Columbia University in New York City. Columbia students, there is another experience many consider but few have the opportunity to experience new cultures and aspects of education. This is one of the main reasons why Howard University students, along with myself, the Howard Exchange Student. The housing coordinator, Stuart, made it her priority to be a part of our lives and kept us motivated and active in projects.

While attending Columbia University, I resided in a co-living area with many students. The workload was heavy, but it was also an opportunity for aggressive panhandling and resisting arrest. Some of the students saw the incident and believed Eddie was treated unfairly and the charges were exaggerated. Consequently, I protested for Eddie’s release. Aggressive panhandling of any kind, however, is illegal and must be stopped. The students and the campus community must come together to support each other.

C-Murder Fires Another Round from the Tank

By Kevin D. Stewart
Hilltop Staff Writer

Just two months after the release of his brother's album Made Man, C-Murder is back with his sophomore album, Hilltop View. C-Murder's previous album, The Last Testament, brought him critical acclaim and established him as a force to be reckoned with in the rap game. His latest release promises to continue his rise to the top of the charts.

C-Murder's new album, Hilltop View, is a testament to his lyrical prowess and his ability to tell a story. The album is a mix of hard-hitting bangers and introspective tracks that showcase his versatility as an artist. Songs like "Closing Down Shop" and "I Remember" are raw and powerful, while others like "Us" and "The Last Testament" are more nuanced and emotional.

The album opens with a bang, as C-Murder addresses his critics head-on with the track "Closing Down Shop," which is a direct response to the comments made by former label mate Soulja Slim. This track sets the tone for the rest of the album, as C-Murder shows his ability to deliver a message with a punch.

"I Remember" is another standout track, where C-Murder reflects on his past and the challenges he has faced. The track is a testament to his resilience and his ability to bounce back from adversity.

C-Murder is known for his ability to tell a story, and this album is no different. He explores themes of family, love, and loss, as well as his own personal experiences. The album is a mix of hard-hitting bangers and introspective tracks that showcase his versatility as an artist.

is considered! In Monu's opinion, the team's attempt to use this case as a platform to declare its case against blacks and legal affairs, said the ruling by itself only prevents an applicant's high school graduation rank when admitted to a university. "This is a challenge to the system," said Beth Bird, assistant counsel for the NAACP Legal Defense Fund. "This case could prompt universities to reconsider how they employ their SAT and ACT scores in admissions."

"It would be absurd to anyone who has an understanding of standardized testing in athletics," Bird said. "It depends on how many other things are in the mix and whether they can justify it." The NAACP Legal Defense Fund is not affiliated with the civil rights group the NAACP for the Advancement of Colored People. However, "I do not think this case would help them," she said. "It is very much like a thermometer." Walker asserted that the University has compiled strong evidence that would easily hold up in court showing that the SAT is as accurate a predictor of a student's academic success as the ACT.

"There is no question that the SAT is as accurate a predictor of a student's academic success as the ACT," Bird said. "It is very much like a thermometer." Walker asserted that the University has compiled strong evidence that would easily hold up in court showing that the SAT is as accurate a predictor of a student's academic success as the ACT.

Thank you for your support. We look forward to seeing you in the fall. See you then.

There are only two items left for this school year, and I am pretty tired. I have covered quite a lot here at the "Mecca" and I enjoyed most. Different writers have also written for many of them in my absence. Regarding, I appreciate them. My sportswriting has been a personal accomplishment during this time. I hope to continue with some other writing in the future. I think I will take a little different approach for this issue. Several people have contributed to this sports page in various capacities. They have been key persons in the Hilftop's success. I would like to thank them for their hard work.

1. Karen Stevens: Thanks for covering those tennis matches and writing stories on the baseball team. You did a great job and understand a great deal about the sports of tennis. I would like to thank you for your work on the Hilltop tennis team.

2. Vahak Aminian: You are a good person and a great writer who has knowledge in the Howard University's tennis team. You really appreciate your willingness to contribute to the Sports Friday section this year.

3. Jenny Brown: A freelance copy editor with the paper, you have put in a lot of work and effort in making my column and articles look elegant. I much appreciate your contributions to this Sports Friday section and hope you will continue working with me on the Hilltop next year.

4. Rhett Butler: One of my freshman writers from New York, you spent off the page, where you wrote for the Black White, which became sport's editor, you continued to write about sports. I am grateful to have you on your staff and your work with me for the remainder of the year.

5. Mark Colton: A freelance photographer who really did an outstanding job with the photos. I would like to thank you for your work and our work at the Hilltop next year.

6. Paul Cotton: The head coach of the wrestling team known as the "Mecca" and I hope to continue working with you on the "Changin' Faces" section.

7. Steven M. Gray: The outgoing Editor-in-Chief of the Hilltop. You gave me the opportunity to become Sports Editor when I was just a staff writer wanting to acquire a few decorations. I don't know what I would do without the right guidance. Good luck with your job at the Washington Post.

8. Kevin Hill: The Photo Editor at the newspaper and a very nice person. He will also be a junior next year and still contribute to the sports section. He will also be a junior next year and still contribute to the sports section.

9. Kevin Stewart: The "head dad" and freindom your roommate. He has taught us much about being a Hilltop and I thank you for your presence on the Hilltop this year.

10. John- John Williams IV: He is the last man standing for the sports section. Thanks for doing a great job with the NFL Draft and the World Championship, and for your perseverance through the worst season in the school's history.

11. Kevin Stewarts: My "road dog" and freshman year roommate. We have had some tough times living in Drew Hall, especially the last semester. I could use this time to talk about memorable people. Nonetheless, I appreciate them.

12. Keenan Suares: The women's basketball head coach. Although she is not responsible for the page a particular week. Next week, I will have her on my staff and work with her on the page. I wish her luck on her aspirations with the magazine and hope to see her working at the Hilltop next year.

13. John Walter: Probably the best basketball coach in the United States. Thanks for providing my main staff writer John-John Williams IV with great photos after each game and for being a model of class and personality, which allows you to be one of the best basketball coaches in the United States.

14. Raymond Ward: An honorary member of the wrestling team. He has worked hard on this sports page and been very helpful. He will also be a junior next year and still contribute to the sports section. We wish the Wrestling Team the best of luck on their next season.

15. Raymond Ward: An honorary member of the wrestling team.

16. Eddy Winters: The women's track coach. She gave me a chance to write for the sports section when the original, four-year-old tennis team, continued to perform my commentary on the greatest athletes. I wish you luck on your aspirations with the magazine and hope to see you working at the Hilltop next year.

17. John Williams IV: He is the last man standing for the sports section. Thanks for doing a great job with the NFL Draft and the World Championship, and for your perseverance through the worst season in the school's history.
