Abstract	Cecile Hoover Edwards was a Howard University professor and dean who was a leading authority on the nutrition of African Americans. The Cecile Hoover Edwards papers document Edwards' medical research career and contain study data, research files, report drafts, artifacts, articles, journals, biographical sketches, correspondence, grant applications, and writings. Among her main topics of study are the Nutrition Program Project and Preganancy outcomes research.

Biographical/Historical note

Cecile Hoover Edwards was born on October 20, 1915 in East St. Louis, Illinois, to Annie Jordan and Ernest Hoover. Edwards started her academic career at age 15, enrolling at Tuskegee University in Alabama. Edwards earned her bachelor's degree in 1946 in home economics with a minor in nutrition and chemistry. In 1947, she completed her master's of science degree in chemistry. Edwards studied amino acids, in particular methionine. Converting food into proteins, Edwards studied ways to use amino acids to find food combinations to ensure low-cost foods could provide as much nutrition as possible. Edwards sought to help low-income families and those who consumed smaller amounts of meat find solutions for protein consumption. After her academic career at Tuskegee, Edwards completed her doctorate in nutrition at Iowa State University in 1950. After graduation, Edwards accepted a position at her alma mater, Tuskegee University, as an assistant professor and research associate of the Carver Foundation. From 1952-1956, she served as chair of the department of foods and nutrition. Edwards then joined the faculty of North Carolina A & T in 1956, and served as professor of nutrition and research and the chair of the department of home economics 1968-1971. In 1971, Edwards accepted a professor position at Howard University. While at Howard, Edwards chaired the department of economics and served as dean of the School of Human Ecology. In 1987, Edwards became the dean of continuing education. Edwards continued to serve communities in need of nutritional education and support. Edwards was concerned about the nutrition of black women and expectant mothers, and researched ways to provide the best nutrition for both the mother and unborn child. In addition to her advocacy, university service and research, Edwards's scholarly contributions were tremendous, including over 150 articles in journals and book-length publications. Serving on the White House Conference Panel on Community Nutrition in 1969 and the National Conference on Black Youth Unemployment in the 1980s, Edwards maintained a presence on national stage in her field. For her contributions, the state of Illinois declared April 5, 1984 Dr. Cecile Hoover Edwards Day. Edwards retired from Howard University in 1999.

Scope and Contents note

The Cecile Hoover Edwards papers document Edwards' medical research career and contain study data, research files, report drafts, artifacts, articles, journals, biographical sketches, correspondence, grant applications, and writings. Among her main topics of study are the Nutrition Program Project and Pregnancy outcomes research.
