The Metro, Washington's premier mode of transportation, is launching a new program which will extend its hours, beginning Nov. 4. A Metro rider will stop turning at 1 a.m., instead of midnight. The extended hours are a part of the Metro's new pilot program, which was approved by the D.C. Board of Transportation. The trial period will last for six months. Toward the beginning of June the program will be reevaluated and it will be seen whether the hours will become permanent.

The Metro's early closing hours have made it difficult for people moving about the city to make evening plans without having a car. After having dinner and a concert we had to take a cab home. The new hours are only a small part of the improvements the Metro is making on the city's transit. The Green line, the line on which the Shaw-Hill stop is located, was recently expanded. Two new stops, Georgia Ave.-Petworth and Columbia Heights, were added. Stopping at the Columbia Heights stop means you won't have to walk to the Tufts Avenue stop. This week, we enjoyed the music of the Shaw-Hill stop, and we're happy to see the improvements. The Metro new hours have been welcomed, but there are still some complaints. There are a great number of students that feel that the Metro should be open twenty-four hours a day. There are still some complaints. Waters Says Freddie Mac’s Report Has Faults

By KENNETH GAGES
Gannett News Service

Despite Freddie Mac's efforts to show its financial strength from the last quarter, critics charge that the government-sponsored mortgage lender has a long way to go before it can claim to be on its way to recovery.

Freddie Mac's recent earnings report shows a $1.4 billion loss for the third quarter of 2001, bringing its cumulative losses for the year to $3.4 billion. The company's CEO, Richard Syron, said the losses were due to higher interest rates and higher loan delinquencies.

"Freddie Mac's problems are not new," Syron said. "We have been working hard to address these issues, but it will take time and resources to turn our company around." Syron added that the company is taking steps to improve its financial situation, including cutting costs and increasing its liquidity.

However, not everyone is convinced. "Freddie Mac has been in trouble for years," said analysts. "Their management has repeatedly promised to make changes, but they keep finding new ways to fail. I don't see any reason to believe that things will be different this time."

Dear Editor,

The Howard Student Government has plans to purchase an elevated balcony for the Howard Student Union. This article, "Second Year Student Body" by Howard's... (Continued)

H.U. Administration: We Are Watching

Part of what made UNITY 2000's platform so popular during last year's campaign season was its full disclosure of HUSA's business along with a transparent window into the everyday activities of its HUSA administration. After myriad disappointments from our student leaders, many students welcome any policy that may find them better informed about what their student leaders are doing. Still, students fail to hold the real power of many of their woes—Howard University's administration—accountable for its actions. The housing fee increase was supposed to fund the replacement of the elevator in Drew Hall. The students have paid for it, so where is the new elevator? Where is the internal reporting and access to information about what the housing increase was also meant to fund? Where is the cable television for the Towers? Please do not allow these discrepancies to escape the Board of Trustees' review of President Swygert's contract.

Howard is currently in a position in which there has been privilege abuse at the highest levels of student government. Still, these offices are all, in some fashion, supervised by administrators. Why are so many asking questions of the students, yet so few questioning the administration's supervision? This scandal begins at the top, and if we seek to get to the root of our money and refuse to continue being shortchanged, we must apply pressure to the key places and demand greater disclosure on the part of the administration.

A Fair Curfew for the District

As night falls on the streets of D.C., teenagers around the city will keep their eyes on the clock and their foot halfway on the Metro in fear that they will violate the currently enacted curfew law. The code demands that kids under the age of 17 must be in by 11 p.m. on weekends and by midnight on the weekdays. The city drafted the code in an attempt to lower the juvenile crime rate. City planners hope that with kids at home instead of on the streets, there will be fewer opportunities for kids to commit crimes.

Opponents of the curfew say that the curfew invades the parent's rights and allows the government to play too strong a role within family decision making. Some city critics believe that the use of the curfew is a cheap excuse to avoid spending money on youth programs that would otherwise deter juveniles from committing crime. The curfew is not the end-all solution to juvenile crime. It is a positive device to keep kids off the streets and safe at home with their families. Instead of arguing the moral and constitutional value of the curfew law, we should applaud the fact that thousands of kids will have time with family, doing homework, watching television—instead of hanging out on the street and possibly being exposed to dangerous situations. While we do not disagree with the theory of a curfew, we do express concern over its real-life application. Curfew enforcement must be applied fairly and equally in all parts of the city, from Georgetown to Anacostia. The curfew cannot and must not be an excuse to harass innocent youths, no matter where they live.

JOSEPH LABRACIO

Reputation for the descendants of Africans living in the United States

We are feeling somewhat taken off guard by the novelty of having to delineate roles and responsibilities for the next president of the United States. We are used to being able to talk about the president's past actions and future plans with some degree of confidence. Now, however, we find ourselves wondering how we can best support the new president in making the transition from the campaign trail to the Oval Office.

The transition process is crucial, as it sets the stage for the new administration's ability to effectively govern. It is important to give the incoming administration the resources and support it needs to ensure a smooth transition.

One way to do this is by providing the new president with a team of experienced advisors and a clear understanding of their roles and responsibilities. This will help the new president hit the ground running and get up to speed quickly.

Another important aspect of the transition process is ensuring that the new president has access to the necessary information and resources to make informed decisions. This includes providing the new president with a comprehensive briefing on the state of the economy, foreign policy, and other key issues.

It is also important to support the new president in setting clear goals and priorities for the first 100 days in office. This will help the new administration focus its efforts on the most pressing issues and ensure that the new president's agenda is well-received by the public.

In conclusion, the transition process is critical to the success of the new administration. By providing the new president with the necessary support and resources, we can help ensure a smooth transition and a successful first 100 days in office.

Dido Performs, Conquers 9:30 Club

BY TURAN BAYRAM

At the lights dimmed, the audience of the 9:30 Club grew in size. Strong, moody light illuminated Dido and her band. Dido, a British singer and songwriter, performed an international mixture of songs that brought the audience what they had been waiting for. Dido mixed and matched the audience she performed for. Dressed in black pants and a black leather jacket, she gave the audience the facts about her music. The background singer's voice brought a Latin man wearing a dacron shirt to the stage and played three more songs, including nearly 1980s songs with African-American roots. Dido performed some of her hit songs off of her album No Angel. The band began to warm up and the audience was ready to take on the world and any woman ready to experience the world on her own.

Dido captivated the audience with her presence as the lights moved from the band. She began to sing "Thank You." The audience sang the chorus in unison with Dido. "I want to thank you for giving me the best day of my life," the singer said. The crowd's eyes glistened as the magic of her music took over the room. Phones rang, dragging with them the music and atmosphere.

Strong, sturdy bass player from the Washington, D.C. area dressed in black jeans, a leather jacket, and black leather pants. A Caucasian man dressed completely in black with his bandmates. A woman with her own music specialty and an additional instrument in her back pocket to make up a complete sound of sounds that blended to create a fusion of alternative music. The band began to play some of her hit songs off of her album No Angel. The audience was at ease, and the rhythm flowed through their bodies. Suddenly, the music exploded into an array of sounds and the audience did the same. People danced along with the congas. An African-American drummer from the Washington, D.C. area dressed in black pants and a leather jacket. The background singer's voices matched her pink hair and her pink shirt.

Dido's casual demeanor coincided with the audience she performed for. Dressed in black pants and a white shirt, she could easily be missed on the crowd. Each member had their own identity to match their particular personalities. The band represents an international mixture, including a Latina woman wearing a dachshund shirt and a purple dress. The African-American bass player from the Washington, D.C. area dressed in black jeans, a leather jacket, and black leather pants. A Caucasian man dressed completely in black with his bandmates. For the first time, a new breed of cell phones has come to the forefront. With the latest offering from a major cell phone manufacturer, the iPhone, it was considered "cool" or "fly" to possess a phone. In 1996, high-school students were astounded at the large size of cell phones in the movie Clueless. Now, various companies are offering services such as Sprint and Bell Atlantic, etc. Cell phones are not only for business or pleasure. Avery Worrell, an international business major, said his main reason for having a cell phone is to keep track of his/her friends. "To keep touch with my friends," the student said. "I am a team leader, so I need help." But what happens if I break down?" The owner of the cell phone knows what time she will pick him up. This idea is not so unbelievable. The booming business of cell phones and other technologies is clear evidence of cellular phones entering college dormitories. Whether for business or pleasure, cell phones are used by everyone.

There are more practical reasons that students buy cell phones. The reasons may differ according to your gender. One of the most important reasons for female students is security. A lot of times, I drive all the way to Buffalo, New York, by myself. What happens if I break down?" asked Nikole Bowers, a psychology major. "Don't ask; my car comes with a mobile phone, but how can I get in touch with something happening?" The main reason for males is accessibility, whether for business or pleasure. Inognito’s ‘Future’ A Gem

BY ADELAIDE FURR
Hilliard-Whitney Writer

You’ve never listened to an album, unable to do anything but lean back in reflection, savoring every note and leading its artistic appeal? Don’t be surprised, because Inognito’s new album, ‘The World Live From Here’, just that.

There is no time like the present to buy this hot album. It consists of more than 59 minutes. Although there are few members of the British band, many with musical training or not, the combination works very well. As a result, the group is constantly looking for new ideas, which are well received.

IDEAL’s music is an invitation to sing that will probably be an album and a hit. The group is composed of two distinct personalities that show each different side of Inognito. Eve: The Roughest Ryder

EVE: Fraud

Eve goes through similar experiences

As with many new records, developing an artist’s style and sound can be a challenging process. Even though there are a number of factors that contribute to this process, it is not always easy. However, with the release of Eve’s latest album, “The Roughest Ryder”, listeners are treated to a unique and thought-provoking musical journey.

The album opens with a powerful statement: “I am the truth, and my art is my weapon.” This opening track sets the tone for the rest of the album, which explores themes of power, endurance, and resilience.

Eve’s voice is a driving force throughout the album, delivering each song with passion and intensity. The production quality is top-notch, with each track sounding polished and well-crafted.

Eve’s latest album is a testament to her talent and dedication to her craft. It is a must-listen for any music lover looking for something new and different.

Elizabeth

By KEVIN R. S. J. MCKEAN
The Daily Staff Writer

In the interest of maintaining the character of Elizabeth, who is portrayed as a strong and intelligent queen, the movie does an excellent job of exploring the complexities of her character. While the film does an excellent job of probing the micro-level, it also raises important questions about the role of women in society. The movie takes place in England in 1554, after the death of Elizabeth's late sister Mary. Elizabeth is subsequently called upon to become queen, a position she putStrLning. But “Elizabeth” is educational, insightful, and engaging.

One Magical Season

By Kevin D. Stewart

In 1974, Howard's men's soccer team embarked on a journey that would lead them to the top of their sport. The Bison squad, led by Howard's former star, had just been announced as the NCAA's number one team, setting an unprecedented stage for the season.

The Bison were able to go undefeated in their regular season and scored the highest points in the nation. By the end of the season, they had established a winning streak of 24 matches, which lasted from 1973 to 1974. Their win over the University of Michigan was a particularly memorable moment for the team.
