Sterling Fails to Complete Most of His Original Platform

This story was reported by the Editorial Board of The Hilltop and managed by Managing Editor Kimberly K. Brown.

With two weeks remaining in his term, Deputy Student Body President Louis Sterling was forced to fail nearly all of his intended platforms. The failure is attributed to a series of student complaints directed at the Editorial Board of The Hilltop, particularly the failure of the student administration to properly monitor and enforce student conduct.

Many students continue to express concern about the lack of student organizational accountability, the lack of student representation, and the lack of student participation in decision-making processes. Sterling’s failure to complete most of his original platform is a serious blow to the credibility of the student government.

This school year, Sterling has faced numerous controversies, such as proposed tax increases, student conduct issues, and a series of student complaints. This raises questions about the effectiveness of his leadership and the ability of the student government to address the needs and concerns of the student body.

In the Spring election, Sterling was forced to fail nearly all of his intended platforms. The failure is attributed to a series of student complaints directed at the Editorial Board of The Hilltop, particularly the failure of the student administration to properly monitor and enforce student conduct.

Although his "heart may have been in the right place," stated Graduate Student Council President Charles Coleman Jr., Sterling failed to complete his platform for the year 1999-2000, according to an assessment of his platform by the Editorial Board.

Sterling’s platform was on the platform of access, inclusion, and performance improvements. This report was written by Sam Adams, editor-in-chief.

“Although this report may have been critical of my platform,” said Coleman. "I want to be supportive as well, as it is important to work together and improve access and inclusion for all students."

BANNER Slows Up Campaigning for Some, Still Printing Faulty Student Transcripts

By Joe Porter, Current Editor

Anyone who was the first student to receive a transcript in the spring of 1999-2000 will attest to the fact that the student transcript system is still not functioning as intended. Students have reported receiving transcripts with incorrect information, missing courses, and missing grades. This has led to confusion and frustration among students.

Long Lines, Computer Failure Muddle Financial Aid Processing

The Office of Financial Aid and Student Employment on Wednesday, December 13, had the line of students snaking around the campus as a result of the new process. Those who are part of the year's new financial aid, segregation, and paperwork procedures became disheartened when they were turned away by the Office of Financial Aid and Student Employment. A new process was in place, but students were unclear as to whether or not they were being denied financial aid.

Birgans Denied Run for Office Due to Banner Foul-up

From BANNER, A1

Birgans, a junior African American studies major, had plans of running for undergraduate trustee until he found out he didn't meet the "progression" requirements needed for the position. Birgans turned in his material for the three-person write-in ballot Wednesday. Thursday morning, he received a letter from the Management Office informing him that he did not meet the requirements. The letter ended with a statement that Birgans' name would be removed from the ballot. Last semester he received an "NG" on his transcript due to the Y2K upgrade. Due to Birgans not submitting grades, or his only conclusion was that the University wanted to try to get the students trained, but it didn't work," Cole said.

"There are some students who are inputting their own grades, but time was running out for the deadline got closer. I think he was just a little caught off guard, that's all there is to it. It's nothing major. It's just that he wasn't aware of the grades that were coming in because there's been a delay in processing the grades," said Waters.

"I didn't hear about the Speak Out until the next day," freshman politician Damon Waters said. "We dealt with the issues before us and there were no graduate issues that came up at the debate. Sayles was elected by a majority of law school students and later switched sides.

"Elian's detention in the U.S. is a violation of federal law and the current Howard University Student Association President said that Sayles should've been had this issue on the table. He is very passionate to the table," said appointee Damon Waters.

Reflections in Black: A History of Black Photographers
Smithsonian Exhibition Details ‘Reality’ of African-American Experience from 1840 to present

By Nicole Foster
City/Nation & World Editor

This is the fifth installment of a series that takes a look at African-American life. The story of African American life, Reflections in Black, is a collective history, a cultural memory. It is also an indicator of things to come.

The first segment of the exhibition, The First 100 Years, begins in 1840. African-American photographs were produced in the new medium of photography. In 1840, John Plum Martin began producing daguerreotypes in early photographs printed on a silver plate, in 1843 in New Orleans. Beginning with the work of Lang, the development of Black photography is followed in this exhibit.

The exhibition details how African-American photography is "a collective identity," beginning with portraits of four persons, in the formation of the "New Negro" ideal, the life and times of the Righteous community on Election Day, 1912.

Black photographers projected a strong role in how blacks visualized themselves. Photographs provide accessible imagery for virtually all facets of the community. E. B. Barry argued that exhibition creators. Art and Black Activism shows the vital role that Black photographers made in forming cultural change and defining the importance of the civil rights and black power movements in the late 1960s and early 1970s.

Marvin, "Ike," and other prominent figures such as Bob Marley, Thurgood Marshall, Malcolm X and Martin Luther King Jr. are seen in-British section through the series of the leading photographers of the time.

The end of the exhibition shows the last two decades in which African America would have grown "deconstructing and reconstituting their personal history and public persona," according to the exhibition. They do this by seeking to reveal and reclaim the power of the rigid conceptions that race and gender hold in our culture.

The camera was the central instrument by which blacks could disprove representations of them. "The eyes" held in exhibition creators. "Black folks, the camera provided a means to document reality that could not be misinterpreted, providing proof from their photographs.

She added, "It was documented that could be saved, passed around. And, ultimately these images, the words they recorded, could be hidden to be discovered at another time."

Reflections in Black can be seen through June 30, 2000, daily from 10 a.m. to 5.30 p.m. in the Smithsonian’s south gallery of the Arts and Industries Museum at 900 Jefferson Drive, SW. Admission is $2.

George W. Bush Captures South Carolina

By BARBARA STERN

The Bob Dylan song, George W. Bush is not referred to by his full name Saturday in the Republican Party's primary election in South Carolina, which could determine who wins the party's ticket in the 2000 presidential election.

"I was a fool, but it's not the right song," Bush told supporters in Columbia, South Carolina. "I didn't vote for George Bush. I voted for me." The candidate, a former governor of Texas, said he would campaign in other states but that he would work to help Bush win the nomination.

The Bush campaign was well prepared for the primary, which will decide the fate of many Republicans. The candidate and his running mate, Vice President Dan Quayle, both made appearances on the campaign trail. Bush was also scheduled to campaign in other states in the next few days.

In South Carolina, Bush faced a tough challenge from Vice President Dan Quayle, who had won the state in 1988.

The primary is held in the state's 1st Congressional District, which includes the city of Columbia. The district is expected to be won by Bush, who has been the favorite in recent polls.

George Bush received 58 percent of the vote in the state, while Quayle received 42 percent.

The results of the primary in South Carolina were delayed due to a technical problem with the voting machines.

In other states, Bush was expected to face strong challenges from Republican candidates.

In Georgia, former governor Zell Miller held a strong lead in the primary election.

In Florida, Republican Sen. Bob Graham was leading in the primary, but he was expected to face a strong challenge from former Sen. Bill Young.

In New Hampshire, Bush was expected to face a tough challenge from former Gov. John H. Sununu.

McCain triumphs in Michigan and Arizona Republican Primaries

CAMBRIDGE—Mass.—Last fall, Michigan Gov. John Engler proposed that Republicans that his state's primary would be the "first-ballot" system of presidential candidate selection.

It was a promise that Engler could not demonstrate.

At the annual meeting of the Massachusetts Historical Society, Middleton said: "The Parthenon (Marshall U.)

The senator can create enthusiasm to the end—and some primaries you win and some you lose," he said.

The word "first-ballot" is a misnomer, he said:

"It's a whole new ballgame." Zogby said.

Give Me Religious Freedom or Give Me Canada

By Courtney Wilson

I articulate this movement! I’m moving to Canada! I’ve been canceling and now this! According to a secret memo, Harris would shut down schools that would force schools to teach The Constitution, and condemn the killing of innocent people. Furthermore, the article states that the bill now states that the government will cancel all the schools that are forced to teach The Constitution. This bill also states that the government will cancel all schools that are forced to teach The Constitution.

The only thing the government is watching Jennifer House. The government can’t pass this amendment and support the killing of innocent people. The government can’t pass this amendment and support the killing of innocent people.

I’m not a historian. However, last time I checked there wasn’t a single fine print in any of the historical textbooks about Jennifer House. In fact, the only thing more exciting than the government watching Jennifer House is that Jennifer House is watching the government.

The Feb. 18 issue of The Hilltop. Due to a program sponsored by America’s present course, it made in a classroom? What’s next? Will legislators vote to change the three R’s to “beer, sausage, and porn,” just to accommodate their lifestyles? I can only imagine about as much as George Bush.

The lack of support for the anti-bullying bill is a testament to the success of the Bush administration’s policies. While Bush administration’s policies have been successful in ending the war on terror, they have been a failure in ending the war on guns.

It’s only illegal if you get caught” might not win over the most diehard conservative, but it may win over the “People’s Elbow” or you like to wear face paint and lay the smack down on Thursday nights. What about Gore? Some of you out there are saying that he is a “proud southern heritage.”

For those who do not know, Mumia Abu-Jamal is a black journalist who has remained imprisoned is because of his outspoken criticism of the Philly police’s brutal history. Mumia Abu-Jamal stands for his degradation to stay put, all in the name of “proud southern heritage.”

If for no other reason, we should show our support for Mumia Abu-Jamal in order to protect our own solutions from the injustice that has been visited on him. On Feb. 27, this Monday, the students of Howard University hosted an event with the Human Rights Watch to campaign against Mumia Abu-Jamal’s imprisonment.

But unfortunately, throughout the South have been draped by the blood of the poor, not only in the name of “proud southern heritage.”

Even worse, it is gross, but not altogether unexpected that Black people should be the ones to inherit the “People’s Elbow.”

Mumia Abu-Jamal has left no one or no evidence showing that he was the “teach the uppity Niggers a lesson.” In the end, these haughty, ignorant, and history. The vulgar crowd of flagitious and besotted white South Carolinians put their heads together and decided that they were going to call themselves the “People’s Elbow.”

They feared the unwashed masses, including his mother, and the persecution of the masses of the poor and underprivileged almost all the Black people. Mumia Abu-Jamal was killed by the police, and the police came with a story about his men who were digging a hole.

The government can’t pass this amendment and support the killing of innocent people. However, the government can’t pass this amendment and support the killing of innocent people.

As in previous election years there has been at least some semblance of a personality. No, it’s not even a personality. It’s a collection of admiration for Buchanan who, if elected, would enact immigration policies that would play like a scene from The Godfather. Buchanan who, if elected, would enact immigration policies that would play like a scene from The Godfather.

The Rock from the World Wrestling Federation. What is more American than a hit of the chronic and maybe even a little bit of crack.

Mumia’s claim that the citizens of that state should decide what to happen to the Black people who okayed concealed handguns and has made the Attorney General, Strom Thurmond, Ronald Reagan and Trent Lott that stand for their degradation to stay put, all in the name of “proud southern heritage.”

Don’t let him die. If for no other reason, we should show our support for Mumia Abu-Jamal in order to protect our own solutions from the injustice that has been visited on him.

From BASEBALL, all

reac cling the MEAC crown last season. The Howard Bison have decided to concentrate on the field this season and are hoping to win the conference championship.

The Bison, who finished second in the MEAC last season, are hoping to make a stronger push for the title this year.

"We're prepared to win the MEAC this year," said coach Jimmy Williams. "We have a lot of returning players who are hungry to win.

The team will be relying on four seniors, including pitcher Andre Rabouin, to help lead the team to victory. Rabouin, who was named to the All-MEAC First Team last season, is expected to be one of the team's top pitchers.

In addition to Rabouin, the Bison also have returning starters in outfielders Eunique Johnson and Reggie Adams, as well as catcher DeShawn Gill.

The Bison's pitching staff will be led by returning starters RHP Alan Harrison (6-3, 2.99 ERA) and LHP Todd Johnson (6-8, 4.54 ERA).

The team's defense will be anchored by returning shortstop Reggie Adams, who had a strong season last year.

"With our returning players and new recruits, we're confident we can win the MEAC," said Williams. "We have a lot of experience and we're ready to make a run for the title.

The team will open its season against Coppin State on February 25th. The first game is scheduled for 1 p.m. at Civic Field in Silver Spring, Md.

The Bison will face some tough competition in the MEAC, including Norfolk State, Delaware State, and Morgan State.

"We have to be prepared for every game," said Williams. "The MEAC is a tough conference, but we're ready to face the challenge.

The Bison are looking to make a strong statement this season and are hoping to win the MEAC crown for the second time in three years.

"We're ready to win," said Gill. "We have a lot of chemistry on this team and we're ready to battle for the championship.

The Bison will need to play the best they can on both the field and in the season to win the MEAC. But with a solid pitching staff and strong defense, they have a good chance to make a run for the title."

The Otha’ Brotha’ Exists

Ladies, understand that a man concerned about your welfare is a man worth knowing. He may be able to help you. Don’t worry about his money. He may be able to help you. Don’t worry about his money. He may be able to help you. Don’t worry about his money. He may be able to help you.

Looking for balance and self-esteem, some young people who understand and truly appreciate the complexities of life choose a man who, whether or not he is married, is available for caring and protection. He is not necessarily influenced by trends such as affirmative action or career-oriented single women. Therefore, this man that I have been referring to is a real person. He is a person that we have searched for and found. So far, as far as I know, he is a person that we have searched for and found.

In the Otha’ Brotha’ movement, the majority of young people are patriots of their communities. The young man who understands and accepts this philosophy is not necessarily looking for a way out of his community. He is looking for a partner to support him in his endeavors. He is not necessarily looking for a way out of his community. He is looking for a partner to support him in his endeavors. He is not necessarily looking for a way out of his community. The Duality of Man: A Letter to Tupac Shakur

"In there is much bein and soul both in me, so there are true angels and some God in him. The heart and the don't can become both feds have also changed...

Samuel Taylor Coleridge

How you feel? (Pos intended: It's no, Peep. You've been on my mind a lot lately, and I thought I'd drop you a line.

I know I never met you, but God tell me I know because of the way you relate to those around you, and still do. Every time I hear something from you, I hear from your past. But most of all, I hear from the realization of that creation between the two that you symbolized so well. You are my constant reminder that "right" and "wrong" is not just these obvious black-and-white concepts with no shades of gray in between, as in any of these hypocritical and自查mks of "social"

I read an interview you had with the New York Times about the posthumous release of All Eyez on Me. I was like, "Wrong, Pac. It's you we're against the world..."

And this is why we believe in the Underworld. None of my friends understand why I was up on that track for the first time all of us in 1992. Now, I look back at that and see, maybe I was. But I said, "Let's keep it to the real..."

In 1995, you dropped the single "Tupac" with a brand new voice. I was still at Howard University's Law School. No one was my muse, this middle-class teenager's spiritual escape route from the parents and teachers. I found it as powerful as and just as much of a gift to me as any I could have heard during my freshman year. I wrote one of your joints down and read it. Everyday I borrow something from you. I borrow from your peace. I borrow from your war.

"God works through imperfect people all the time."

I'm trying to make intelligent investments that will encourage me to read better. What you did that night, it's still going on now, at graduation.

The Duality of Man: A Letter to Tupac Shakur

"At there is much heat and some cold in man, as there is there some anger and some God in him. The beast and the devil be not separated in the man, I have been told. I have heard much from the man, I have heard from the man. But most of all, I have heard from the man that is most equal to the man that is most beautiful as well. You are my constant reminder that 'right and wrong,' 'black and white concepts with no shades of gray in between, as so many of these hypocritical and mercenary of 'moral' humanity' would have us believe. Your picture is right by my bed, so your eyes are the first pair I see every morning. Your eyes, your eyes, your eyes. In your eyes, I glimpse your internal struggle, and your struggle gives me strength to fight my own."

"They got me trapped. I'm the rebel of the underground."

"Now it's 2000. Your supporters are still numerous as are your detractors, who legitimize you by even talking about you. What happened was very unfortunate, yet it made you even more powerful as a martyr."

"I love you, cuz.

This stuff is hectic, full of sex, dogs, and killing. I'm trying to rise above that stuff, class of 2002.

Sometimes I feel like I'm not living the life, that I'm not doing enough to prove it. But I know I'm not. I'm trying to make intellectual investments, that will enable me to earn billions. While you cats sit around, I'm trying to create new ideas and new concepts."

Tiger Woods Syndrome: The Biracial Census and Black Self-Hatred

Driving While Black—Who Cares?

For the past 60 years, the popular term DWB (driving while black) has been the term of preference for those who feel the need to label blacks for their own self-interest. Many members of the black, white, and other racial interest groups deploy this term to disparage and marginalize individuals who challenge the status quo. The term has been used to highlight the systemic racism that continues to impact individuals and communities of color. The term DWB is used to differentiate individuals of color from their white counterparts, often leading to a sense of discrimination and marginalization. The use of this term highlights the need for continued education and awareness about the impact of systemic racism and how it affects individuals and communities.
