The petition period for students running for office has passed. This year, several rules changes have been made to encourage more students to run.

Recent changes have been made to encourage more students to run. One thing we are trying to do is really think out the box," Lawson said. "Not every student is going to sit back and listen at the traditional speak-outs, so we are trying to find the best method, in which to get people to participate."
Where there aren't enough black men in college, the argument goes, there aren't enough black women, a point that Ferguson notes is often missed.

First, the organization's Gentlemen Scholars Program is launched. This program is designed to encourage more black men in college "there are more black men in jail than there are in college," according to Ferguson, speaking to the well-being of black men in the community at-large. Ferguson cited the well-known fact that there are more black men in jail than there are in college. As a result, the Gentlemen Scholars initiative seeks to operate on two platforms. First, the organization's primary goal is to bring more black men to college. Second, the program seeks to help men away from their responsibilities to their communities after their incarceration.

The initiative will recruit young men from across the country to come to Howard for a weekend where they will be able to network, attend classes, interact with students and professors and attend skill building workshops and informational forums.

Participating in the Gentlemen Scholars Program, Ferguson will receive the opportunity to improve their college readiness skills, including how to manage finances, as well as to improve their understanding of the idea of the program. Ferguson credits his idea of scholarship and the black man with his father, Elbridge A. Ferguson Jr., who pointedly exhorted him by the age of 12 and under the wing of the first black Premier of the Bahamas and former Prime Minister. Elbridge's influence was fostered and he received a scholarship to the prestigious Fanshawe College in London, Ontario, Canada. Once at Howard, his father explained the idea of the program. Ferguson credits his idea of scholarship and the black man with his father, Elbridge A. Ferguson, and the other members of the organization have also thought about the women on campus. The Gentlemen Scholars Program isn't the only Gentlemen initiative at Howard, according to Ferguson. Ferguson is a former president of the university's Classics Honors Society, the Golden Key Honors Society and is on the Dean's List. Ferguson also has the idea of the program. "Black men are not coming out as qualified as black women, that's a problem for the entire community," Ferguson said. He asked, in regards to black women, who are they going to have?"

"I'm hopeful the Gentlemen Scholars Program is going to change the way that we think about these issues," Ferguson said. He asked, in regards to black women, who are they going to have?"

Smithsonian Chooses Site For Future African-American History Museum

BY AMBER ENGLISH Metro Editor

After reviewing several sites and plans, the Smithsonian Institution has picked a final site for the National Museum of African American History and Culture. The site, which was chosen as the best location for the museum, is a site near the Washington Monument, between Constitution Avenue, Madison Drive, and 14th Street NW, according to a Smithsonian press release.

The site, now known as the "Monument site", was chosen from an initial group of four that were signed into law by President George W. Bush in 2003. The other potential sites included the current home and building of the Smithsonian Institution, and a site that would overlook the planned Benjamin Franklin Memorial.

"On this historic land, we look forward to working with the various planning commissions, the National Capital Planning Commission, the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation and the Commission of Fine Arts, to build a remarkable museum that will inspire generations of future visitors from around the world with truly American stories of perseverance, courage, talent and triumph, and that is completely accessible and respectful of the solemn evolution of the Mall," Secretary of the Smithsonian Lawrence M. Small said in a press release.

Each site was also analyzed on logistical details, including availability of public parking, nearby attractions and entertainment, and the ease of providing security to visitors.

After the engineering study was completed, the Smithsonian Board of Regents visited each site, and took feedback from the public through their website.

The final information was gathered through a public town meeting held in November of 2003.

"But I don't think the Washington Monument is the best choice for a museum of our time," Small said.

The National Museum of African American History and Culture was initially created in 2003 by Congress and signed into law. The museum will be the only national museum dedicated to the complete history and culture of African Americans.

Woodson Home Dedicated

Park Service Now Begins Remodeling the Shaw Residence

For nearly 25 years, the Carter G. Woodson home in the Shaw neighborhood has been vacant and abandoned. But the Woodson house will soon become a National Historic Site. Saturday's dedication ceremony at Shiloh Baptist Church marked the official designation of the Carter G. Woodson Home as a National Historic Site under the care of the U.S. Park Service. The Woodson home was previously designated as a National Historic Landmark in 1976, but that only made for a tiny plaque on the facade of the Shaw townhouse.

In December of 2003 when President Bush signed the legislation into law, the museum will run for six months, until the automatic permit ends. Warnings that maintenance worries that maintenance costs would rise are the case of the project do, named from 82-4 billion. Cost savings would come through a number of changes, including cutting the number of escalators, elevators, and platforms (Figures). Metro Board members have voiced warnings that maintenance costs would rise if the project does not occur on the entire platform.

Early this month, Metro announced plans to add the longer trains to run a year program of improvements, including the addition of many sidewalks that now run alongside the tracks. Recommendations from the task force include cosmetic and pedestrian trails and walkways along Routes 1 and 7 near Tysons Corner. The task force also supports improvements of the Orange Line.

Metro Expands Testing to Orange Line

During Monday's morning rush hour, Metro tested the eight car trains on the Orange Line. This is the first time Metro has used the longer trains for regular service. The trial period will run for six months, until additional rail cars arrive this summer. Metro hopes to add the longer train to the evening rush hour by December. By December, 20 percent of trains are expected to run with right cars. Trolleys will be gradually replaced until the automatic permit ends. Figs are waiting some time this summer.

IF YOU GIVE COWS HAPPY LIVES, THEY WON’T NEED DRUGS.
As Helen moved up the undergraduate ladder, what she learned and didn’t want to do with their degree became clear. Mayes change in mind—change and their actions—their degree and often a degree worth less. It is natural for people to change their minds while in college but sometimes unnecessary actions, poor planning, or being uninformative can result in students dropping out.

Thinking back, many students chose the 5-year plan on purpose: many made poor decisions. Not many students change their minds. Not many say, “I was reading the Hilltop and stay involved, helping students move to the next phase of life. Counselors should intervene early and stay involved, helping students stay on track. A very thorough mandatory orientation class that details the presentation classes they will be taking and the services, but we shouldn’t be surprised at their repeated graduation efforts. Communication is key with graduating and we should all keep each other on track.

Our View: Counselors should prepare early and stay involved, helping students maintain an efficient plan.

Ladies, Why are “Good Men” Rare?

Stephen Redhead

It was reading, the Hilltop and chatting with my friend, the black, blue-eyed, blue-nosed student. I happened to be in the Hilltop's office. I wrote a column titled "Ladies, Why are ‘Good Men’ Rare?" and I was shocked. It was surprising to see the response. Many women wrote to say that the column was not necessarily about them. It was about their friends and what they were experiencing. I was impressed with the response and decided to write more columns about the same topic.

The Hilltop's response to the column was overwhelming. It was a great opportunity to share the experiences of women and to encourage them to speak up. It was amazing to see the level of interest and the passion that women had for this topic.

The response was so positive that I decided to write a series of columns on the topic. I hope that these columns will be helpful to women and will encourage them to speak up about their experiences. I also hope that they will inspire others to join the conversation and to support women in their own ways.

The Hilltop is an important platform for women to express their experiences and to share their wisdom and advice. I encourage all women to take advantage of this platform and to contribute to the conversation. I also encourage men to listen to the experiences of women and to support them in their efforts to create a more equitable and inclusive world.

I am grateful for the support and encouragement that I received from my colleagues at The Hilltop. They were incredibly helpful and supportive throughout the process. I am also grateful for the support of the women who wrote to me. Their experiences and advice were incredibly valuable and helped me to write more columns on the topic.

I believe that the Hilltop plays a crucial role in promoting equality and social justice. I am committed to continuing to write columns on this topic and to support women in their efforts to create a more equitable and inclusive world.

In conclusion, I hope that these columns will be helpful to women and will encourage them to speak up about their experiences. I also hope that they will inspire others to join the conversation and to support women in their own ways. I encourage all women to take advantage of this platform and to contribute to the conversation. I also encourage men to listen to the experiences of women and to support them in their efforts to create a more equitable and inclusive world.
Million Dollar Babies: The Fun of Rich and Famous Children

BY CIRIA FAMILLE

Okay, I’ll admit it. I am addicted to watching rich people do stuff on TV. I love to watch the lifestyle of the rich and famous. I’ve been an avid follower of the “The Bachelor” or “The Bachelorette” for years. It’s my favorite TV show. I love to see the luxurious lifestyle of the contestants. I don’t care if they are real or not, I just enjoy watching them.

But I’m addicted. I admit it. I’ve been addicted to watching rich people for years. I’ve been addicted to the lifestyle of the rich and famous. I’ve been addicted to the fun of rich and famous children.

Along with Balenciaga bags, parties and hilly dressers, motherhood has become one of the hottest trends in Hollywood, with high-end baby boutiques selling everything from jeweled pendant vests to luxury motorcycles.

Hollywood moms are used to seeing the VIP lifestyle want to extend their expensive wardrobes and lifestyles to their children, and baby boutique boutiques have become a must-have for celebrity parents.

Rita Wilson, a member of the group TLC owns a high-end baby boutique in Houston, Texas called Chase’s Closet. Many of the labels featured in the store are made for the world that I might be a part of. One trend I’ve noticed is that parents want to dress their children in “Million Dollar Babies” style, which seems to be everywhere. I’ve even seen it on the streets.

The trend of dressing baby children well... well, it’s just part of the fun of being a parent. I mean, who wants to see their kids in those cute onesies that you see in Target. Seriously, will a kid actually enjoy wearing those? Little kids play. They get dirty, they spill stuff, they eat messy food. In my mind, what’s the point? I love fashion and I don’t want my kids to be seen in those clothes. I want them to look like they’re part of the fashionable world.

It seems like every celebrity parent gets the money, the designer gets the money, and the designer gets the money. It’s expensive name brands like Baby Phat, slick, lilac, and designer wardrobes.

Baby Austin, Cinderella, Bambino, and Rocky Mad, are just some of the labels that have been on International best-dressed list.”
