Biographical/Historical note

Amiri Baraka was a poet, writer and playwright who was instrumental in the Black Arts Movement and subsequent politically-charged literary and artistic eras. Born Everett Leroi Jones in Newark, New Jersey in 1934, Baraka showed great interest in poetry, literature and music at an early age. After graduating from Barringer High School in Newark, Baraka entered Rutgers University on an academic scholarship. After deciding he desired a more culturally-rich educational experience, Baraka transferred to Howard University in Washington, D.C. Baraka graduated from Howard University in 1954 with a bachelor's of arts in English. Baraka entered the military serving in the Air Force from 1954-1957, but was dishonorably discharged after three years of service. Baraka continued his education at Columbia University and the New School for Social Research although he did not earn a degree. Living in Manhattan, Baraka was a regular in the Greenwich artist communities, befriending such Beat icons as Jack Kerouac. In the early 1960s and under the name Leroi Jones, Baraka emerged as a poet and playwright, publishing Preface to a Twenty Volume Suicide Note, The Dutchman, Blues People: Negro Music in White America, and The Moderns: An Anthology of New Writing in America. After the assassination of Malcolm X in 1965, Baraka officially changed his name to Amiri Baraka and embraced the struggle for racial and social justice. Leaving the Beat artist community and his wife, Hettie Cohen, Baraka established himself in the Black Arts Movement and became a Black Nationalist. After his Black Arts Repertory Theatre project in Harlem closed, Baraka opened the Spirit House Players in Newark. In 1968, Baraka accepted the Muslim faith and chose to add the prefix Imamu to his name, claiming the role of "Spiritual Leader." Also in 1968, Barak published Black Fire: An Anthology of Afro-American Writing with Larry Neal. From 1968 to 1975, Baraka was chairman of the Committee for Unified Newark, a black united front organization. Baraka was a founder and chairman of the Congress of African People, a national Pan-Africanist organization with chapters in 15 cities. In the 1970s, Baraka dropped the moniker "Imamu," and became a Marxist. He later taught poetry at the New School for Social Research in New York, literature at the University of Buffalo, and drama at Columbia University. He also taught at San Francisco State University, Yale University and George Washington University. While serving as the poet laureate of New Jersey, Baraka published "Somebody Blew Up America," in 2001 setting off a firestorm of criticism. Not new to backlash, Baraka defended the poem, but was later removed from his position as poet laureate. Baraka died in 2014.
