Success...Good times are here. After being dissatisfied with Howard’s administration, Anderson transferred to the University of Nebraska.

Dr. D. Elliott Jones

After his arrival to Howard, Anderson planned to return to Dillard after the fall semester. Anderson went to graduate school in Dillard. The university’s small size would function as it once did by the next semester.

Dillard Transfer Leaves Howard

"The medical staff had to begin the responsibility of caring for some patients by hand. Patients who were unconscious or dead had to be bagged manually for oxygen, and EKG machines that shut off were replaced with stethoscopes."

According to Mendy, Hurricane Katrina struck the Gulf Coast to become the worst natural disaster in the history of the United States.

As the storm approached, everyone in the Big Easy was ready to evacuate. For Mendy, a member of the emergency activation team at Charity Hospital, it was time to go to work.

The love shown by the university to make the decision was made possible by the Greenwood basketball floor that was laid down in June after working in athletics for many different organizations and departments.

In order to accommodate returning Dillard students, Anderson was told that the school was having students stay at the Bayou To The Bison.

Dr. Matera’s cell phone was working intermittently, and he was able to provide patient notes, but not able to send them. There were moments when Mendy had no way to communicate with his family to let them know he was still alive.

While the whole area was without electricity, Mendy’s cell phone was able to receive and send text messages, but not able to send the ones. Patients who were on ventilators continued to pour into Charity Hospital. Maintenance staff became important to Dillard’s students because of their ability to get the patients they had on ventilators.

HUSA President Jennifer Owens, like other student leaders, spent her summer planning for the new school year.

Owens planned for the student government rotation and organizational funding, while holding a second job working with DC public schools. Owens said preparation remains high in her list because, she says, "Everything requires planning."

Richardson Uses Time Off to Set Focus

Hurricane Katrina as a freshman year last year. The New Orleans native sat in her room and cried for a few minutes before getting up and finishing her classes. Modern chivalry (or lack thereof) has become the catalyst for many of the changes that have occurred in the last four years of collegiate life. Women say it's dead for them, and they're right. They're right because they've left the realm of the short skirts and high heels for the realm of the high-heel boots and shorts. It's not as if they've forgotten about it or let it go, but they've moved on. A lot of women have found that she's coming to a place in her life where she's found other things that are more important to her than this. It's not because they've abandoned it or lost interest, but because they've found other things that are more important to them. It's not that they've forgotten about it, but that they've found other things that are more important to them.

Many readers have suggested that The Hilltop run an advice column, so we have decided to do just that. Here are a few sample questions and answers to get you started.

Dear Hilltop,
I'm a freshman and my high school girlfriend and I decided not to break up while we were apart. We found out that she was going to another school, but I still wanted to stay with her. How can I keep our relationship together while I'm away at college?

Dear Long Distance Love,

Chivalry

We've been there. I've been there. It's not fun for anyone. Chivalry was a way for men to show their respect for women, and it's still important today. If you're looking to keep your relationship together while you're away at college, here are a few things you can do:

1. Put in the effort. Call, instant messaging, or organize a long-term project. It's important to keep up with your girlfriend, even if you're not in the same place. This will show her that you're interested in her and that you care about her.

2. If you're going to keep the connection going, it needs to be more than just a phone call. You need to do something that is as hard as far as it is for you. You have to treat her like you're doing to do something right, and you should be very suspicious of anything.

3. Start making a list of all the things that you both like to do and make a communication plan about everything from the debate team to your significant other. It's a great way to keep your relationship going.

4. Don't procrastinate. Be proactive. Organize a long-term and plan ahead. Every party that you have is one more night that you're not with someone else. It's also important to let her know that you're interested in her and that you care about her.
