Deltas Usher in New Year with ‘New Horizons’

Contributing Writer

The ladies of Alpha Chapter, Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Inc., hosted their annual Proselytization Day yesterday afternoon for their sorority sisters, friends, and others who preceed into the sorority members of the chapter, as well as others who came from far and near to partake in the event. This was a beautiful way for them to show their love for the chapter and each other. "I would like to thank our members, parents, peers and others who were present to watch our sorority sisters," Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Inc., serves as a tangible reminder of the high esteem in which they hold this organization and their support to our members," explains Francois. "This event marks the beginning of a circle of friendship, sisterhood, and organization and the charge of Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Inc., as the sorority members ush­er in New Year with 'New Horizons.'"

Recreation Center Gets Facelift

Students are already playing on the recently refurbished pool tables, as well as listening to music in the recently opened gaming room. Students have enjoyed the expanded territory as well as enjoy the home. Students are already playing on the recently refurbished pool tables, and even the arcade machines have been expanded. However, with the open pool tables, as well as the other items will be enjoyed by all. Students will be charged a fee to purchase or lease the pool tables, increasing revenue for the 'Rec Center.'

Google Introduces Search Archive

BY BRITANY HUTSON

Google announced a search archive feature to provide users, like Corby Weathers, with more convenience.

The popular search engine Google recently released the feature, the Google archive news search, was designed to offer free articles dating back 200 years for the public’s convenience, says a Google spokesperson. "By working with part­ners to bring their content online, we can extend the amount of information available to users," said a Google spokesperson. "This archive news search is an extension of the usef ulness of the inter­net. Many say that this feature is another fulfillment of Google’s mission to organize the world’s information," contends the representa­tive. C-Store Still Not Ready for Dining Dollars Usage

BY BRITTANY LUSS

BY BRITTANY LUSS

Almost every Howard student has been there before: that twilight hour between classes when you've been stuck in an insatiable hangry and don't have time to sit down to eat.

Convinced that only a selfie and some peanut butter cookies can break you of your kind, you head over to the Blackburn Convenience Store, grab your hungry and sit down. With your ticket in hand and your stomach just a few inches from the register, you feel relief, tinged with a bit of regret. After all, you can see a package of Future Farms and a working desk in Douglass in under minutes. When it's your turn to pay, you proudly brandish your Capstone Card, only to have your aspirations crushed, instead of being flash, left with three little words: "No dining dollars.

Dining Dollars is still not a payment option, much to the disappointment of Howard students.

"It's been too long since the C-store opened," Iman Imoji, a sophomore film production major, said. "We've had more than enough of it, too.

Almost a year after the C-store's unveiling, the inability to use dining dollars remained for Howard students.

"Whitman, it's more of a convenience, its lack of dining dollars ready, only to be excused," said Yasmina Campbell, a sophomore classics major.

A year after the C-store's unveiling, the inability to use dining dollars remained for Howard students.

"While the store itself is convenient, its lack of dining dollars is something that we expected to see," said Isaiah Deiz, a junior English major.

For other students, the lack of dining dollar usage is not about convenience and has more to do with saving money.

"Living on a budget, I prefer to pay my dining dollars as opposed to cash, said Imoji, a sophomore film production major.

"While the store itself is convenient, its lack of dining dollars is something we expected to see," said Imoji.

Mohamed Abdelilah, Director of Operations for Sodexo on Howard's campus, is disillusioned with the C-store's lack of Dining Dollars-ready equipment.

"It's here for the students' convenience," Abdelilah said. "But it's not available to all students and that's a problem.

Abdelilah cited the problem as one technical problems that surfaced during the installation of the C-store's register.

"All of the [cash register] systems all over the University were updated to ensure that we didn't have as much of a problem with viruses. Unfortunately, there were technical issues with the new convenience store register, and that's what we're working on now.

The registers, he said, are high maintenance and expensive.

An optimistic Abdelilah said that the C-store's dining dollars feature will be as popular and helpful as it is at other convenience stores like those in Northwest Hill and the Bethune Annex.

Dining dollars usage in the convenience stores is something that is great for all Howard students, whether at Main Campus, in the residence halls or on the Law School Campus.

The dining dollar system works by depositing the arrival of a price point and a cash drawer from the C-store's register. The dining dollar system works by depositing the arrival of a price point and a cash drawer from the C-store's register.

Unlike the Amazon convenience store, pictured above, the C-Store in Blackburn still does not take dining dollars. A Sodexo official said the store may accept dining dollars by Homecoming.

Graduate School Celebrates Edward Bouchet's Birthday

On Friday, the Graduate School commemorated the 130th birthday of Edward Bouchet, the first African American to earn a Ph.D. in North America, with the first annual Edward Bouchet Forum and luncheon.

The featured keynote speaker of the event was Shirley Malcom, Head of the Directorate for Education and Human Resources Programs of the American Association for the Advancement of Sciences, who opened a discussion on the importance of African-American participation in the fields of science and technology.

Attendance of the forum included the director of the National Science Foundation and representatives of Howard University, the Council of Graduate Schools and the American Association for the Advancement of Sciences.

Chapel Recap: Sept. 17, 2006

Dr. Floyd D. Flake, the Andrew Rankin Memorial Chapel Director, returned to his congregation to help his audience appreciate and regard "love" as wealth.

Dr. Flake, who is president of Morehouse College, eloquently shared his words on why love is such an important topic of discussion.

"Love transmutes everything in our life," Flake said.

The former U.S. Congressman is presently the president of the Brooklyn College, the largest college in New York City, with a student body of approximately 40,000 students.

During his 20-year pastorate, Flake has become one of the nation's foremost Christian churches and the only church to receive the Andrew Rankin Memorial Chapel Director, a position he has held for over 20 years.

Flake said that God is love and that love is the foundation of our lives. He shared his words with his audience on why love is such an important topic of discussion.

Dr. Flake's words resonated with his audience and helped them understand the importance of love in their lives.

Even though slavery has been abolished in America, there is a variation that still exists today. Human trafficking, becoming a booming underground industry that is often unnoticed, involves millions of people worldwide. Considered by many to be the modern-day "slavery," it is characterized by illegal and exploitative acts across international borders and results in financial exploitation.

"It is modern-day 'slavery, but that difference is that before it was legal and supported by the institution," whereas today it is illegal and is sponsored by criminals," says Derek Ellerman, Executive Director of Polaris Projects. "The point of this is that it affects not only everyone but anyone in developed or less developed countries in some form or another."

"It is a problem that affects practically every corner of the world," explains Ellerman. "The point is that it affects every country, every region, and every community."

In fact, according to the United Nations, 2.4 million people are trafficked every year. Of those, 1.8 million are women and girls and 600,000 are children. Of those, 244,000 are children trafficked for sex. Additionally, 1.2 million people are trafficked for forced labor, and 1.2 million people are trafficked for forced criminal activities.

"Almost 300,000 to 350,000 people are trafficked across national borders and used for labor and sexual exploitation, according to the U.S. State Department. Most are said men and children," explains Ellerman.

"It's a form of trafficking, it's hard to define, it's a problem that is both occurring in the East Coast, and we have almost no aspect of trafficking," Ellerman said.

"It's a problem that affects everyone, efforts to slow its growth are ongoing.

Rice Makes Slavery Comment in Essay Introduction

In the October 2000 issue of Essence magazine, Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice is featured in an interview in which she makes a controversial statement about the war in the Civil War and the Civil War. When asked if the decision to go to war with Iraq was the right thing to do, Rice said, "Absolutely, I'm sure there are some people who thought it was a mistake to fight the Civil War. I know there were some people who said we don't get out of this war, take a peace agreement with the South, but have the South win the war.

Rice defended Bush's decision and his U.S. war strategy by ruffling some feathers with regard to her boss. According to Rice, President Bush and his cabinet "are not only the architect of the situation, but the architect of the situation behind the decision," Rice said.

Rice's comments have generated a lot of interest among the students and faculty at Howard University.

In a letter to the editor, the student newspaper, the Howard Chronicle, has announced that it will be publishing a special section on the topic of human trafficking. The Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) estimates that trafficking generates about $5.4 billion annually and is the second largest criminal industry in the world after prostitution, but is the fastest growing.

Among the causes of the recent media attention on human trafficking is the fact that it is used as a form of labor and is often carried out by children and women.

"Pimping is a form of trafficking, it's hard to define, it's a problem that is both occurring in the East Coast, and we have almost no aspect of trafficking," Ellerman said.

"It's a problem that affects everyone, efforts to slow its growth are ongoing.

Harpard Drops Early Decision Program

By KANITA MASON

On Monday, Harvard University announced that it will no longer offer early decision program for the 2017-2018 academic year. The new policy, which went into effect immediately, will allow students to apply to Harvard for early decision starting in the fall of 2017.

Harvard University receives thousands of applications every year, but the University is looking to reach more students by dropping its early decision program. "We believe that this will help us reach more students," said Harvard University President Lawrence S. Bacow.

"Early decision programs attract more students from diverse backgrounds," said Bacow. "We are committed to ensuring that our student body is diverse and that students from underrepresented communities have the opportunity to attend Harvard.

"However, we have also heard from students and parents who believe that the early decision process can be too stressful," added Bacow.

"Our goal is to ensure that all students have the opportunity to attend Harvard," said Bacow. "We are committed to ensuring that students from all backgrounds have the opportunity to attend our University."
It would be an indication of how real television indeed has taken form. It has a voice of its own. No longer is television a passive, mechanical experience; it has evolved into an interactive, participatory medium. We are no longer just viewers, but active participants in the stories we watch. In this new era of reality television, we get to see the lives of others up close and personal. It’s not just entertainment anymore—it’s storytelling.

Soon after, CBS began to premier its first reality television series, ABC’s America’s Funniest Home Videos debuted and from there, reality shows have become today.

Bison Drop to 0-2 in Loss to FAMU Rattlers

BY ELLIOTT JONES
Sports Editor

There were more at stake than a single conference game on the line Saturday, when the Howard foot­ball team took on the Florida A&M Rattlers. A loss would drop the Bison to 0-2 in MEAC-SWAC action that would almost certainly carry any hopes of winning a conference championship.

In the end, Howard's lack of experience and multiple missed opportunities cost them at FAMU, coming away with a 3-2 victory at Greene Stadium.

The loss was even more significant for the fact that the Bison have trouble finishing in the second half of the game, a trend Joe Son also noted last week.

Conversely, the Rattlers improve­d as the game went on, with senior running back Keon Coleman's 92-yard TD run securing the win for FAMU. Howard, however, continued to struggle in the second half, allowing the Rattlers to pull ahead in the second half

Welcome Back Senator Kerry

We were happy to see Democratic presidential hopeful and Massachusetts Senator John Kerry come to Howard while campaigning back in area. Although for this reason, we were pleased to see him remain an active politician after the loss and appreciated him taking the time to quite speak with our students.

During a speech about national security, Senator Kerry looked to students to be the change needed in our government and made no secret of his disappointment with the actions of the Bush administration.

Though we definitely appreciate Senator Kerry making a stop by Howard and challenging students to be involved, we can't help but wonder why he is coming out as strong now about Bush and the way the electoral votes were handled in Ohio. It is hard to get past what he evoked when he expressed his frustration with the Howard student body.

We are happy to see Senator Kerry return to Howard, especially after the Bush drama last year.

Our View: We are happy to see Senator Kerry return to Howard, especially after the Bush drama last year.

As a Howard student, it was not a big surprise. However, the outcome of their visit could not have been predicted. While the wonderful toiletry Senator Kerry raised, students were not invited to attend the event the first day hosted. We were even locked out of our own, student-center and asked by Courtland Milloy of protesting only because we did not get out and sound our Bush the first lady were rescued, that's why in Friday year. Although he didn't win, we were pleased to see him about Bush and the way the democratic presidential hopeful we did not have to do. But whether or not Kerry is a flip-flopper doesn't really matter, since he took the time in office—and really ready not to do so.

We, at Howard, see something the actions of the Bush Administration and his (Kerry) was not a big surprise. But whether or not Kerry is a flip-flopper doesn't really matter, since he took the time in office—and really ready not to do so. We, at Howard, see something like the song, "What It's Like" (Enroll 2007) for everyone to wear a condom. Everyone in my crew to AIDS, everyone in my crew. With friends that have lost ones to AIDS. Everyone in my crew. Everyone in my crew. Everyone in my crew. Everyone in my crew. Everyone in my crew.
