The brothers of the Howard Choral Chapter of Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia Fraternity held a town hall meeting yesterday for students in the music department.

Chairman of the General Assembly, in a two-page resignation letter, wrote that he could not work with Oklahoma, Kansas, and Nebraska chapters, and thus he had been forced to resign from the executive board of the HUSA. The letter was dated June 1, 2005. In the letter, the chairman said that the HUSA's budget was asked for more than $135,000 for the upcoming academic year. He said that this amount would allow for the maintenance of the university orchestra, the purchase of new equipment for the music department, and the improvement of the facilities of the Department of Music. He also said that the university needed more funding to support the music department.

In a previous interview with The Hilltop, Ferguson said that she was aware of the issue of tuition and fees. She said that she had been in touch with the administration and that she was working on a solution. She also said that she was committed to the university's $135,000 budget to General Assembly and that she was working to make sure that the university received the funding it needed to support the music department.

Drew Hall Sex Forum Informs and Entertains

BY TRAVER RIGGS

A junior physical therapy major, Hilltop Staff Writer was the head organizer of the forum. "People are going to be having enough fun and are going to be encouraged by the environment to have sex," Branch said.

Presenters poked about ranging from rape to HIV.

Speakers talked to a lounge filled with students from west to east and out of the door after Harlem DJ "DJ Anonymous" had some audio problems. Branch brought in a resident assistant to troubleshoot the audio problems and the program opened the evening with a spoken word piece called "Multicultural Understanding and World Peace," formed about love, hope and today's mission in creating a discussion and encouraging attendance in the community.

"We can't be multidisciplinary if we don't love in black and there is no world peace if the world is messed up," Jones said.

A group of freshmen students worked with the organization. Men Can Step Up, to perform a skit promoting rape prevention.

For more: from the D.C. Rape Crisis Center (DCRCC), defined rape related terms such as sexual assault, acquaintance rape, and date rape. He also provided the audience with some statistics.

According to Vials, sex is the most common rape perpetuator. "People just aren't suspicious of it," he said.

DCRCC created a part of its presentation to create organ ize counseling services and programs to forward and other universities such as The University of District of Columbia and George Washington University. Following DCRCC's segment, was a presentation by Betty Jones, a public health specialist with the Department of Health. Jones talked about rape and education and executive director for Street Foundation, and Aye Cole, radio personality, shared personal stories.

Cole's family member was a victim of gang rape during Howard's 1999 Homecoming. "We are an innocent, beautiful young woman," Cole said of her relative who contracted HIV from her rape encounter.

Freshmen students from various dorms on campus gathered together last night at a sex forum in Drew Hall Lounge. The forum stressed the importance of practicing safe sex, the rapidly growing AIDS rate and the idea that men too can stop rape. Various volunteers from organizations such as the D.C. Rape Crisis Center, spoke at the event.

The Metropolitan Police Department arrested a woman they believe burglarized an apartment in Brent Village on Sept. 26.

Georgetown student Amber Dorsey said she woke up at 5 a.m. to find a woman in her apartment. She said the woman entered her apartment through the unlocked front door.

"I was surprised to see someone who does not live in the apartment," said with the woman left the apartment.

Dorsey said she discovered that her living room had been vandalized.

"My roommate's stuff had been drenched all over the kitchen table," she said.

The only thing missing, however, was a RaspberryAmerica, which was valued at $35 by her police report.

Dorsey logged onto the Public Safety Docket. Darnell Harris said officers located a woman who fit Dorsey's description inside a control of the Library Center, and that woman was identified as Shirley Love.

The most important thing about this evening was to neither encourage nor discourage "but rather to promote a healthy lifestyle," he said.

"We know you've already needed to hear," Bailey said. "We just want to make progress."

THE HILLTOP
President Bush's campaign and policy relating to America's efforts to capture Osama bin Laden have taken renewed interest because of claims made in a new ABC network mini-series, "Tails of '91." This documentary implied that Bush blundered in his efforts, as reflect by, "...euphoria... bin Laden: According to the documents, when the World Trade Center was first bombed in 1993 by bin Laden and his terrorist group, the Clinton administration decided to treat the attack as a crime rather than as an act of terrorism against the United States. This decision was said to have been made at the time that there was no solid evidence linking bin Laden to the bombing. Professor John Davis in the department of political science and the author of "The Global War on Terrorism: Accessing Bin Laden. He stated, "This lack of commitment to America, so I did not bring his name here because we had no basis on which to hold him."

Clinton also stated in the report that the FBI did not believe there was enough evidence to indict bin Laden. Therefore, they opposed bringing him into the United States.

Richard Miniter, author of "Losing bin Laden: How Bill Clinton, Radcliffe, Unabomber, and Ghadaoui" wrote that the Clinton administration simply did not want the responsibility of taking Osama bin Laden into custody and he has done nothing in trying to capture bin Laden.

National security advisor to the Clinton administration family member stated on CNN news report that Clinton had made in his last long before the World Trade Center attack on September 11, 2001, an attack which killed 2,979 Americans. Berger claimed, in August 1999, the U.S. sent six-fifty missiles into Afghanistan to examine his lungs. Berger states: When we [Clinton administration] cancelled the operation ground, we released bin Laden by captive, someone must have ratted us out and he was able to escape.

In his interview with Fox, news, Clinton recalled that after the missiles hit Afghanistan, he was criticized for the bombings as well as a lack of being too observed with capturing Osama bin Laden and al Qaeda by the right-wingers.

Clinton stated that when his administration did not act, Americans, in trying to kill bin Laden, quit their terrorist network, the active need was then missed by observers within the media and Congress as disgraceful factors.

Instead of the allegations made against him, Clinton states that he had a responsibility and he did the best he could with the cards that were available to him.

Journalists Face Danger Abroad

BY ADIA BETTS

Since the American invasion of Iraq in 2003, there have been mundial by journalists killed in the Middle East. American journalists continue to sustain injuries there, constantly exposed to political and social threats, harm, kidnapping, beatings and death for their work or doing what they do. In recent years, there has been a growing concern about the safety of journalists working in this region. The United Nations has repeatedly called for improved security for journalists in Iraq, where at least 33 journalists have been killed since the start of the war.

There are several reasons that journalists are at risk. Some foreign correspondents, who work in this region, are targeted for their reporting on topics that the government considers sensitive. journalists are often affiliated with terrorist organizations, which use the media to spread their message and recruit new members. These organizations often disrupt the normal functioning of journalists, who are often forced to work in dangerous and hostile environments.

"Our goal is to ensure that journalists are able to do their jobs safely and without fear of violence," said a spokesperson for the International Federation of Journalists. "Every journalist who works in Iraq is at risk of being targeted by armed groups or by government forces."

"They also want to relay the important events in their own country, which shape the future of their nation and the world," continued the spokesperson. "Journalists must be able to report the truth, even when it is difficult, in order to hold governments accountable and to provide information to the public."

"Of course you will have to take risks," said another journalist who has worked in Iraq for more than a decade. "There is no such thing as a completely safe environment for journalists, but you must understand your risks and how to mitigate them."

Students have varying opinions on whether or not they would personally become foreign correspondents in hostile areas, especially in the Middle East. Some believe that it is a way to make a difference and bring attention to important issues, while others worry about the safety and security of working in such conditions.

"It is not easy to work in Iraq," said a professor at a university in the Middle East. "Journalists must be prepared to face challenges, but they must also be confident in their ability to do good work."

The situation in Iraq remains fluid, with ongoing conflicts and tensions. Journalists continue to face challenges in their work, but they also play a crucial role in the democratic process, holding those in power accountable and informing the public about the events unfolding in the region.

Zenobia Morrow views herself as a painter and a designer, and her environment has motivated her to be creative. "I was a little girl," Morrow said. "I had an environment that motivated me to participate in two exhibits together as a community of artists, and an anthology of tennis, baseball, golf, bowling and boxing games, as well as two controllers. The first controller, which is a remote control, effortlessly slams the Wii. The second controller, which is a remote control, is made of a hard plastic. The other is called the 'nunchuck,' and works in conjunction with the remote control. Additional controllers are priced at $50 each.

Both controllers incorporate motion and technology-sensing motion, bringing a new level of interface for the motion-sensing games. Thanks to the motion-sensing on the remote and nunchuck, gamers can physically interact with a game environment.

"We think it's going to make a reasonable amount of money, but a lot of the money will go to the artist," said Antii Fager, director of Business Development for MySpace.com. "We as in the Washington Post learned the illegal litigations of Napster and will never forget the new generation of music that exhibits any copyright violations.

"I've had to turn away artists and producers because I didn't have time to deal with them," she said. "However, life is about balance. When looking for the things you love and the things you have to do to get paid."

"I've been successful in my endeavors despite the fact that it is difficult to promote art," she said. "I'm also continuing the work of doing art for the artist and a designer." One of the misconceptions of being a designer is "Many people think that they can learn the design programs and software that designers use," Morrow said. "I feel like the Wii won't be popular because of the lack of advertisement," Morrow said when asked about the exposure of the console.

"The Wii is the least expensive of the three next gen consoles, so I think there will be a lot coming in at $49.99 and the Wii Sports will be a big hit."

Games for the system will nest approximately six titles per year, including the game titles "The Legend of Zelda: Twilight Princess" and "Super Mario Galaxy," the newest installments of Nintendo's top game series.

As if it wasn't enough to accom­pany great players such as Barry Bonds, Alex Rodriguez, and Jose Canseco by joining the famous am­ateur club, All-Star baseball player Benjamin was named Mr. Forever. Allow me to explain the meaning of the term.

Benjamin, the elder statesman, is a man of many talents. He is not only an excellent baseball player, but also a skilled student of the game.

"Benjamin is a true gentleman," said Michael Benjamin, a sophomore at the University of California, Berkeley. "He has a quiet confidence that makes him stand out in any crowd."

In addition to his baseball skills, Benjamin is also an accomplished musician and a gifted poet.

"Benjamin's poetry is truly remarkable," said his friend, Sarah Lee. "His words have a way of capturing the essence of a moment."

Blacks in Reality TV Perpetuate Stereotypes

Like drama queen New York and fellow contestants Kim and Darrick, Flavor of Love is the state of reality television today. "Blacks and reality shows, it's a perfect match," Bootz says. "There are so many opportunities on television that aren't really there in reality."

But reality television isn't really real, says Flav looking for Kim heading to jail, "It's like just entertainment, but there is no reason they should pay those salaries. And people love these shows."

Just in the past year, camera crews have followed the lives of Lil' Kim heading to jail, DMX being his usual angry self, and it is up to us to turn off the television. This season of Flavor of Love shows us that we are caring about nothing other than entertainment, even at the expense of children, will these reality shows continue to make our country civil and intelligent?

Preparing to go to jail should not be elevated to just entertaining New York or self-hating Cruddy Blackie. These reality shows may seem like just entertainment, but their impact can be devastating.

Most of us know reality television isn't really real, but many of those who watch, including the youth, don't. So let's all upgrade our television. You want reality? Read a book.

Our View:

We don't like this new trend of black reality shows that negatively impact the image of black people and it is up to us to turn off the television.
