The Hilltop Board discussed a multitude of issues Thursday evening that will undoubtedly affect all Howard University students and organizations.

 Cônes fiercely searched algorithms for digits 75 and 394 and had an inkling they were of work for the 76th Annual Student Art Exhibition.

This year's selected pieces consisted of everything from籌asket design and street art to graphic design and sculpture. More basic forms, such as sketch to photography, were also exhibited.

Many of the pieces were formed with a large variety of colored markers, which often come in a variety of colors, spray paint, acrylics, and oils. More basic forms, such as sketch to photographs, and sculptures, were also exhibited.

The show also recognized family members who had inspired students' works. Most students expressed their gratitude under the guidance of teachers and graduates.

The director of Afro-Blue Ensemble, professor of music major Janice Smith said, "This is an assignment that required students to promote themselves to potential employers, and it helped teach assignments.

Students Address Fine Arts Course Requirement

BY MERICA WILLIAMS-MURRAY
Column Editor

While everyone is not artistically inclined, everyone has some sort of creative side. Some might express themselves by painting, while others may express themselves by singing. Everyone has the ability to express themselves in whichever way they’d like.

Dr. Patricia Tatum Williams, 20-year-old student in the School of Communications and the College of Arts and Sciences, is required to take at least one elective fine arts course to graduate.

Explaining why students are required to take a fine arts class at least once, Dr. Williams stated, “We feel it is important to fulfill the graduation requirement for all students, regardless of the major they are majoring in within the Fine Arts department. Everyone has the ability to express themselves in whichever way they’d like.

Williams stated that the professional world, those who are in the arts department, everyone who is in the School of Communications or the College of Arts and Sciences is required to take at least one fine arts course in fulfillment of the graduation requirement.

The program allows students to choose from a variety of art courses that interest them. Students are encouraged to try something new and perhaps different in the process.

Students are required to take at least one fine arts course at Howard University to complete their graduation requirements. The courses are diverse and range from music, art, dance, theater, and other creative fields.

The program allows students to explore their creativity, learn new skills, and find their passion.

The importance of fine arts education cannot be overstated. It is not just about the technical skills, but also about the development of critical thinking, problem-solving, and interpersonal skills.

Dr. Williams emphasized the need for a well-rounded education.

said that his work examines quilting technique and spirituality and how they both offer protection. His third piece was a sculpture that he said represents the transition from Africa to America and how the culture survived the transition.

Junior graphic design major Shukura Burrell came in second place in the ceramics category. Burrell created everything in her piece from scratch. Her pieces included a clay and wooden frame spray painted in gold that held removable ceramic pieces.

Burrell also displayed one of her class assignments in the exhibition. For one of her classes focused on West African calligraphy, Burrell created a painting as her final project. Craving for "something different, something funky," Burrell created a painting full of color, calligraphy and hieroglyphics.

Linda Williams-Dean, a graphic design and photography student at Howard said, "I love it. So far so good. I like a lot of the paintings. I'm falling in love with the acrylic paintings and photography." The exhibition will continue to rotate through March. Admission is free and spectators may view the exhibition between 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.
Nothing against the Chicago Bears, but the team’s glory days came during the 1980’s, the era in which they dominated the NFC and were virtually unstoppable. The Bears are one of the most storied franchises in NFL history, having won six Super Bowls and more than 1,000 games in total. Their success can be attributed to their strong defense and innovative coaching staff led by Mike Ditka.

The Chicago Bears have a long and storied history in the NFL, having won six Super Bowl titles and multiple conference championships. Their dominance in the 1980’s is widely regarded as one of the greatest eras in franchise history.

As for the Cardinals, they have had their moments, but their success has been more sporadic. The team has only reached a Super Bowl once, in 2000, when they lost to the Green Bay Packers. Overall, the Cardinals have a record of 512-536-11, which places them near the bottom of the NFL’s all-time win-loss list.

Despite the differences in their histories, the Cardinals are still a formidable team, with a talented roster and a strong coaching staff. Their ability to compete against some of the NFL’s best franchises speaks to their potential for future success.
A photo caught up with former Washington Redskins outside linebacker Cato June, who caught up with former teammates and coaches for an interview in his hometown of D.C. The story is about the impact of the Super Bowl on the city and the football team.

In the interview, June talks about the transition from college to the NFL and the challenges he faced in making the transition. He also reflects on his time with the Redskins and the impact he had on the team.

June says, "It was a difficult transition, but with the right support system, it was manageable. I learned a lot during my time in D.C. and it prepared me for the challenges I faced in the NFL."

Senator Barack Obama (D-Ill) will be holding an informal event at George Mason University this week. Several thousand students are expected to rally in support of the senator and potential presidential candidate.

The “Yes We Can!” event, which is sponsored by the Barack Obama Presidential Exploratory Committee in conjunction with Students for Barack Obama organizations and the George Mason University College Democrats, will be held in the Freedom Center in Fairfax, Va. Students who wish to park in Lot 6 and students who wish to take the Orange Line to the Virginia Tech stop are expected to arrive early for parking and transportation. Those wishing to arrive by bus are expected to arrive early and to be dropped off at the Freedom Center at 11 a.m. Students will be greeted by student volunteers and directed to the event.

During the event, the senator will talk about the need for students to vote and for Americans to attend the November elections.

Students will rally in support for Senator Barack Obama today between 11 a.m. and 4 p.m. at George Mason University.

“Since the very beginning of this movement, we’ve been very attuned by the amount of dedication that these students have provided,” she said. “And students traveling for Obama do so one issue (including, of course, the situation that the senator has sparked within students from across the country).”

Underage Drinking Still Glamorized by the Media; Student Debate Over Legal Drinking Age Continues

BY MELANIE CHAMELIES Contributing Writer

Alcoholism is still a major social problem, yet Lindsay Lohan recently checked herself into a Los Angeles rehab center for treatment for alcoholism. Lohan is 20 years old, but she has been in the public eye since the legal age limit for alcohol consumption was 18 years old. Lohan has been arrested numerous times for driving under the influence of alcohol, and has been in rehab for drug and alcohol abuse treatment.

According to the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism (NIAAA), research shows characteristics such as risk-taking, rebelliousness, and a desire for independence, as well as previously tried treatments that resulted in relapse or absence of alcohol abuse. There is little that can be done to intervene harmfully by factors that may cause a predisposed inclination to alcohol and risk-taking to be found to be partially caused by increased brain development in adolescence. However, according to NIAAA, environmental influence can be altered and therefore serves as a factor that deserves to be considered. Alcoholics Anonymous meetings for more than a year.

Lohan achieved her star status from typically family-oriented films such as "The Parent Trap," "Freaky Friday" and "Mean Girls." She has also starred in the sitcom "The Parent Trap," "Freaky Friday" and "Mean Girls." Lohan's rehab visit has drawn attention to the national issue of underage drinking.

"People do what they want to do, but people see those images and don't see drinking is something that's habit-forming like tobacco. Many non-profit organizations are beginning to reach the appeal of the flashy commercials and have started programs and programs to combat the urge to drink.

MCAA has published a guidebook for parents and college students and programs to combat the urge to drink and also believes that the legal drinking age is too low.

"Mean Girls" was the last film in which Lohan had a starring role. She had taken a break from acting and had spent time in rehab for drug and alcohol abuse treatment.

"Mean Girls" was released in 2004 and was directed by Tina Fey, who also wrote the screenplay. The film starred Lohan, Amy Poehler, Rachel McAdams, and Timothy Spall. It was a box office success and won several awards, including the Golden Globe for Best Musical or Comedy Film.

Perspectives

Atnerican leadership in professional sports is far from equal.

At the time, a lot of folks let us remember an oft-forgotten pioneer, Fritz Pollard. Pollard was the first Black professional football player and served as a player/coach for the Akron Pros in 1921. He became the first and second African-American head coach in the NFL.

American sports editor of Howard University athletics. Pollard, a native of Virginia, was the first Black coach in NFL history. Pollard served as a player-coach for the Akron Pros in 1921. He later went on to coach the Chicago Blackhawks, an all-black team that played successes.

As we approach Sunday and people gather around to watch the first ever National Football League game, let's remember the contributions these men and women have made to our country. Although not often discussed, their achievements are a direct result of a perpetual struggle for equality and justice.

In March of 2003 the NFL created an organization called the Fritz Pollard Alliance. This organization's mission is to work for diversity in the NFL with a focus on increasing the number of assistant coaches, scouting front office staff, and other African-American talent. The Fritz Pollard Alliance works to promote the Fritz Pollard Legacy, which is to increase the number of assistant coaches, scouting front office staff, and other African-American talent.

I wish I could go back in time and see my heroes. I've been disappointed that every man has put the city to risk. I wonder if they would still believe in me.

I published a few statistics about Smith's presence in the Super Bowl, but it seems that there is no need to repeat them here. Smith and Dungy have both shown that they are equal to the task.

He doesn't play like a south-bound draft pick. After this season, the front office should be smart enough to negotiate his contract and keep him. First peek in the eighth and the kid intercepted Tim Tebow.
