Residence Life Plays Fair with Off-Campus Housing

By Brigette Arden

"We try to make the process as easy as possible," said Beth Greene, assistant director of Residence Life. "The off-campus housing fair will bring a spirit of cooperation from students and the administration to help students find the way home in the city of Washington, D.C."

The Office of Residence Life attempts to make the process of finding off-campus housing as smooth as possible, according to Assistant Dean of Residence Life Marla Lee, Ph.D.

"It's not 9 to 5, Monday through Friday," Lee said. "The process of finding off-campus housing begins the day you arrive on campus."

The inauguration ceremony for Marcus Ware, the 47th HUSA president, was held April 7 in the Blackburn ballroom at 6 p.m. Following the inaugural oath, Ware addressed the audience in the Hansel and Gretel Room.

"You're not going to have to struggle to find a comfortable environment when you find the way home in the city of Washington, D.C."

According to another source, some students believe they have outgrown on-campus housing. They wish to live off campus. Others just want to make the move because they believe they have outgrown on-campus housing. They wish to live off campus. If you have housing covered in your scholarship, then you're going to cover housing, freshmanshared senior Wood Harris believed said and said that he was going to cover for any options the student provided. According to The Associated Press, Harris believes the student went well, "It's difficult for scholars to housing, but you have to try something a different way.

The housing allowance is never decreased. It is primarily adjusted to reflect any increases in University housing charges," said Hotchkiss.

In state housing, the housing allowance is set to increase by $500 for the 2023-2024 school year, a change from $2,500 to $3,000, according to the Governor.

Some students have a difficult time accepting the logic of this situation.

"It makes some sense for Financial Aid because it's a refundable and wisely paid," she added. The University, according to the Governor, thousands of dollars to students, including a full scholarship.

Scholarship recipients are still left to find a way to pay for the overpaid costs of University housing.

"When I came to school, I didn't think I was going to have to come up with an extra thousand to pay for it. At least my parents paid for the money," said Hotchkiss.

The increased housing allowance for the fall semester is expected to help cover the increased costs of student housing.

"It's more my lifestyle and not necessarily a financial benefit," he said. Hotchkiss added, "I don't think the University would roll over annually."

"It's enough to keep me on track," he said.

"It's enough to keep you on track without having to go out and earn money," he said.

The increased housing allowance is expected to help students and families more easily afford the increased costs of housing.

Why Redefine the N-Word?

The debate over the N-Word has gotten very graphic and divisive, and it will probably continue for some time. One of the major reasons for this is the importance that the word has to some people. The N-Word is a very sensitive issue, and it can be difficult to talk about it without causing offense.

Our View: Altering the definition of negative terms does not erase their negative history.

Despite how we may want to redefine the N-Word, it is impossible to erase the history behind it. By accepting these derogatory terms as positive, we are accepting the stereotypes and prejudices that led to their creation. It is time to remove these terms from our vocabulary completely.

The N-Word has negative connotations, and altering its definition will not change that. The word has been extended to other words and people as well. Therefore, it is time to remove them from our vocabulary completely.
