A study released by the Information Technology Association of America showed that the number of women in technological fields has decreased in recent years by 20 percent. In 1996, women made up 27 percent of the workforce, but by 2005, that percentage had dropped to 17 percent.

Sophomore electrical engineering major Anea Carlson chose to enter engineering because she has the knowledge and the intuition to compete in a field where the roles of women and other minorities are decreasing. "Women aren't getting degrees in engineering and furthering their educations after they obtain their degrees at higher rates than men, in fact," Noel said.

Noel said that although there are not many females in engineering and because of the way the tech field is changing, there are less opportunities for women. "There are less opportunities for women right now, and not only in the tech field," he said.

Recently, there has been a decline in the number of women who choose to go into tech fields and has reasons for why this is happening. "I'm sure that there is an uptick in the number of women and other minorities that are interested in the field, but in the tech field, I'm sure that the opportunities for women are decreasing," Noel said.

Carlson said that although the numbers are decreasing, there is a good ratio of women and minorities in the field. "Women are getting degrees in engineering and are not decreasing as much as we anticipated, but there are definitely opportunities for women," Noel said.

Carlson said that the numbers are decreasing because women are represented, because if the women were in the boardroom making decisions, all decisions, one perspective is less. Carlson said. She continued, "As a woman of color I am proud to be on the fast track to a career in engineering. My major is difficult, but I want other young women to know that the tech field is exciting and they should look back into a career because there are so many opportunities."

The ever so popular dinner society, traditional ways of choosing to turn the excitement and a movie date, has taken dating. Dating are a thing of the past. In today's changing social environment, some have rendered the traditional dinner is no longer defined as dining and a movie type of dating as obsolete and experiment with unconventional outings.

The District of Columbia is currently in a housing crisis. With rent prices soaring, many students have a hard time finding housing that is affordable and safe.

When students factor in the summer months, the task becomes even more difficult. A large amount of college students return to their campus homes or ship out to their chosen vacation, or job, often finding housing being at an unreachable price.

Little of campus during the summer, is the only reason many have housing for their application, professors make for

Many students at Howard claim that the perfect job or career once they graduate is often the perfect opportunity for the real-world students, often get lost or find themselves in a standstill with their job or career.

February said some surveys reported as low as 40 percent of Americans have their own car, even if they are expected to be employed.

Natalie Beeman, a freshmen broadcaster, majored in media, who only works during the summer, said, "I understand why students may not enjoy jobs."

"The majority of people in the workforce are working for long and they may not enjoy job options in their field.

Another major problem is the lack of students with math and computer science skills, which can be hard for students to work since schools usually hate their jobs because they [students] have a good job.

LifeScience.com also factors in income and location, and the lack of jobs in a job as being major factors that contribute to people who hate their jobs, regardless of how they are working.

People who make slightly more than 25,000 have the most satisfaction, followed by those who make more than 40,000. This is true for those who value their job over money.

"I don’t have a job," said one student. "I work at Starbucks, and I don’t enjoy my job."

"I have a good job," said another student. "I work at a retail store, and I don’t enjoy my job."

"I have a worst job," said a third student. "I work at a call center, and I don’t enjoy my job."

Despite high competition for positions paired with rigorous applications, a survey found that 97 percent of Americans under 25 hate their jobs.

Congratulations Team 1867

Last week, Howard University's Team 1867 won the National Intramural Basketball Championship. This marks the first time any Howard basketball team has won a national title. The team, coached by Coach Louis Chizik, is a testament to the hard work and dedication of the players and the team's support system. The University's win not only adds to its rich athletic tradition but also brings honor and pride to Howard's campus and its students.

Our View: This victory is a great accomplishment for Howard, and it should have garnered more recognition.

The University only publicized the team's achievement after we had given it recognition ourselves. This is a great contrast to the support given to teams from other institutions. Howard, Arizona, and Florida State are all well-known in the basketball world.

We at The Hilltop are proud to have been a part of the process in spreading the word. However, we are not satisfied.

Howard's victory was significant for Howard students and its athletic achievements, but it was not cool, and when time ran out, the students had to bear the consequences.

On May 1, the 3-year-old South Korean male was accidentally shot and killed by a 23-year-old South Korean student.

This event made headlines in the United States and worldwide, with the student's actions being questioned and investigated.

The team, led by Coach Louis Chizik, continued its dominance, winning the championship game against Florida State in the championship match.

The University's win not only added to its rich athletic tradition but also brought honor and pride to Howard's campus and its students.
