When you attend a prestigious university like Howard, there are always those individuals who stand out in the crowd. Junior finance major Johnella Hardy is one of the many students who stand out at Howard. The organization she is a part of, the Entrepreneurial Leadership Institute, allowed her to gain the knowledge she needed to start her business.

Hardy credits all of her parents for inspiring her with their success. "I have been inspired by their willingness to learn and just guiding them in the right direction to help them in their lives," Hardy said, "It is the same thing with me. I have allowed the school to help me in the right direction as well."

Hardy is a member of the ELI since freshman year, which has provided her with the knowledge that has led her to where she is today. "The ELI has taught me a lot of things about entrepreneurship," Hardy said. "I have been able to put my knowledge into action and see the results."

Hardy has been able to put her knowledge to work and has been able to create a successful business. "I have been able to create a successful business because of the knowledge I have gained from the ELI," Hardy said. "I have been able to put that knowledge into action and see the results."

Senate Republicans Remain Divided on Iraq

Gen. David Petraeus (left) and Ryan Crocker speak to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

The two days of testimony by Gen. David Petraeus and Ambassador Ryan Crocker failed to resolve the question of whether the surge is working and what the future of the war will be. Republicans generally vociferously opposed the strategy while many Democrats signaled their support for keeping the military effort intact.

"What you see here is how divided the party is," Senate Foreign Relations Committee Chairman Senator Joseph Lieberman of Connecticut said.

"We're seeing a constantly shifting political landscape," Senator Richard Lugar of Indiana said. "The president says, 'I can't work with this Congress,' but the Congress is saying, 'You can't work with us.'""

SEC, Justice Department Pursue Execs in Stock Option Grants Investigations

By Ashley Totten Contributing Writer

As Home Depot’s stock price continues to drop, the company’s executive compensation plans come under scrutiny. The SEC and the Department of Justice are investigating whether the company’s stock option grants were properly documented and if executives profited from the grants.

According to the SEC, Home Depot has failed to properly document the stock option grants, which could result in severe penalties for the company.

"The SEC has found that Home Depot failed to properly document its stock option grants," said SEC Commissioner Robert Gensler. "This is a serious breach of the law and could result in significant fines and penalties for the company."

The Department of Justice is also investigating the matter, and could file charges against executives if evidence of wrongdoing is found.

The investigation comes after Home Depot’s stock price dropped by more than 10%, prompting concerns about executive compensation and ethics.

"We are concerned about the company’s stock price drop and the implications for its investors," said Justice Department spokesperson Sarah Young. "The department is committed to ensuring that executives are held accountable for any wrongdoing.

The investigation is ongoing, and the company has not yet made a formal response.

"We are cooperating fully with the SEC and the Department of Justice," said Home Depot CEO Craig Bigelow. "We are committed to ensuring that our executives are held accountable for any wrongdoing.

"The company has taken steps to improve its stock option grant documentation process, and we are committed to ensuring that our executives are held accountable for any wrongdoing.

"We are committed to ensuring that our executives are held accountable for any wrongdoing," said Home Depot CFO Timlin. "We are working closely with the SEC and the Department of Justice to ensure that our executives are held accountable for any wrongdoing.

Howard, by the way, would announce for a certain reason that the school has made a $5 million endowment, that the top five Howard basketball players were selected by the media, or that the student body had voted to go to the Big Ten. These announcements would certainly generate spirit on this campus," sophomore Scotia Smith said. "People walk around asking for autographs from players and talking about their Howard shirts.

"We have a homecoming band," said marketing major Danita Williams, "We're wearing their [Howard] shirts matching their nails and hair. If you come to games in the fall and basketball or even beating those teams seeming lack the ability to have spirit, the loss of the school colors."

"Yes, there is a lot of spirit on campus," explained marketing major David Hark. "People would knock on their [Howard] shirts, depending on whether or not they're doing well. Student athletes of Howard University have to have spirit if students have it. For many lines spirit is important in coming in the shirt of the school colors.

"Oh, we've lost when we lose and win when we are there when we are there in [Howard] Stadium the very next [Kennedy] Stadium," senior wide receiver for Howard University football, however, said that the school's athletic teams are not doing well. "If we lose we lose and if we win we win. "From the bar to the games."

In order to thrust Howard Bison football to a certain extent," he added, "If we still have their school spirit with other smaller Bison sporting events. Howard University students are known for usually being spirited at major sporting events, but many ask whether Howard University fans have it. If so, they maintain their school spirit with other smaller Bison sporting events. Howard Bison football place Roberts Parker III agreed. "I know that there is a lot of support for Howard Bison football besides football in the fall and basketball in the spring, other sports at Howard University are equally important in our school." Howard Bison player for the men's soccer team, "The number of Howard students doesn't have school spirit," said Stephen Black. "We're number of Howard students to carry out easily.

Bison Athlete of the Week: Natalie Williston

BY ARANDA JARISON Contributing Editor

The Bison Athlete of the Week is one of the most beloved traditions of the MSU student body. A weekly series, the Bison Athlete of the Week, features the best student athletes from the school. This week's honoree is Natalie Williston, who has been selected for her performance on the court.

Natalie Williston is a senior at the University of Massachusetts Amherst, studying economics. Williston is a four-year varsity player who has helped lead the team to its best season in years. Williston's performance has been key to the team's success, and she is the heart and soul of the Bison Athletic Department.

Williston, a center from Savannah, Georgia, has been selected as the most valuable player of the year. Williston's performance has been key to the team's success, and she is the heart and soul of the Bison Athletic Department.
White House Becomes
The Empty House

This Friday marks White House Press Secretary Tony Snow's last day on the job after being brought to the White House to replace Scott McClellan, who resigned in 1999. Since he is leaving, we urge treatment for cancer and because of salary issues. According to the Washington Post, Snow made $168,000 a year, a pay cut from the $200,000 he earned when he worked for the Bush administration.

Many White House officials have resigned, including Karl Rove, nicknamed "The Architect" and "The Mastermind" by Washington Post, and other White House advisers stepped down from their jobs with intentions of leaving the field of government work.

Our View: Resignations are leaving citizens even more wary of the government.

In June, White House Counsel Harriet Miers resigned after six years due to pressure from both parties. In April 2007 Meghan O'Sullivan, deputy national security adviser stepped down from his job, with insurgencies in Iraq and Afghanistan.

In late August, Karl Rove, nicknamed "The Architect" and "The Mastermind" by Washington Post, announced his resignation, effective Sept. 17, shortly after Snow resigned. It appears as if the weight of doing serious business.

This lack of White House resignations often give the appearance of just short of the end of Bush's term. As, what are Americans left to believe regarding the correctness of White House officials? These resignations were a welcome change. However, the administration is losing influence. Officials leaving often come after another shows that Americans should question any organization in which senior members jump ship.

There is still plenty of work to be done before the next president takes his or her post and decisions can be made to test the nation.

So, what is the end of Bush's administration going to be like? And do you want to write for The Hilltop?
