Ruby Lilic's Saturday night performance raised $300 for Third Trip to New Orleans

BY AMARYLLIS PURDY    Correspondent

The ASB Benefit Concert was held at the Howard University Auditorium with the proceeds going directly to a scholarship for Howard students to take their third trip to New Orleans at the end of the spring semester. The event was held in the Howard University Auditorium and was managed by a student committee. The event was a night of musical performances, spoken word, and theatre performances that were all held in support of the Howard University student trip to New Orleans.

ASB Coordinator, Kaye Johnson, addressed the crowd before the doors were opened and welcomed everyone to the event. Johnson expressed her gratitude for the support of the Howard University community, as well as the community at large, for their contributions to the event.

The event featured performances by various artists, including spoken word by different artists, a musical performance by a local band, and a theatrical performance by a student group. The artists were carefully selected to ensure that the event was a success. The ASB committee worked hard to ensure that the event was a success.

The event was held on February 25th, 2008, and was attended by a large number of people. The ASB committee worked hard to ensure that the event was a success, and the event was a huge success.

MEAC Leader Morgan State Defeats Howard

The Morgan State University Lady Bears took on the Howard University Bison in a Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference (MEAC) women's basketball game at Hill Field House Saturday.

Morgan State defeated Howard 64-59, with a big game from Senior guard Asha Sanders (17), who recorded a double-double of 12 points and 11 rebounds to help lead the Lady Bears to a 64-59 victory.

Sanders led Howard with 11, junior forward Jameson House had 10, and Morgan State's top scorer was Ashley Franklin with 14.

Howard's best effort came from guard Antonio Johnson, who scored 18 points for the Bison.

Turnovers were a key factor in the game, with Howard committing 20 turnovers to 13 by Morgan State.

The Lady Bears appeared to be in a good spot, trailing by four points in the 1st half. But early in the second half, Morgan State went on a 20-3 run and cut the deficit to 29-17.

Howard rallied and took a 32-30 lead, but Morgan State rallied and took a 59-54 lead with 6:24 left on the clock. The lead grew to 64-59 with 7 ticks left on the clock.

The second half was a struggle for Howard, as they missed 20 of their 32 free throw attempts, including 8 of 10 on one possession.

Morgan State, on the other hand, had a 70-57 lead at the half and made 41 of 65 shots from the field and 30 of 34 free throws, including 12 of 12 from the charity stripe.

Howard missed 8 of 10 free throws in the second half, finishing the game 54 percent from the floor, 28 percent from the charity stripe, and 52 percent from the field.

The Lady Bears outscored Howard 37-17 in the second half.

NEXT UP: Morgan State will host Norfolk State on Tuesday at 5:30 p.m., while the Bears can move closer to the regular season title if they defeat the Pirates of Hampton on the road.

The Bears, who are now 10-4 in the MEAC, can clinch the title with a win over the Pirates of Hampton on Tuesday.

THE HILLTOP
Howard Alumna Steps Back from Six-Figure Salary

BY SHARRITA WILHARD
Contributing Writer

If she didn’t believe in “making it in America” involving acquiring a lot of money and holding onto it, Shorter Mylles may have given up the idea of making six-figure numbers early on. However, she realized that making reasonable money was unrealistic, so she decided to make a living in the world of entertainment.

Though she went on tours with popular artists such as Lipo_Price and Tony! Toni! Toné, she went from making figures to only $7 an hour. So, she didn’t find it easy to go back to school and eventually needed a loan to afford her college classes.

A former Catholic school student, Shorter Mylles would have never thought college and a job would go hand in hand. However, Shorter Mylles knew that what she wanted to do was a year-round job.

Though she had only taken four courses in the music business, Shorter Mylles went through college and on to happy.

She worked with competitive marketing companies in the music industry and was successful in her field. She also married twice.

However, right after her divorce, she discovered that she had not placed her talents in her education, and she needed to further her education.

Then she realized that the $7-an-hour security job she went even more to the extreme of by her classmates, including Lamont Marcus who was also an Audio Production Major.

“My mother always says, ‘You have a degree in marketing. Why are you looking for a job like it was a six-figure job? and you have done it differently?’ But you have to believe you have done it differently. But don’t cry. Don’t even be anybody see you cry.”

Audio Production Major Works With Other Howard Artists to Produce ‘Mekka Music’ due in April

BY DANIELLE KWATENG
Style Editor

With intention to put a fresh face on his career, Lamont Marcus has already made his name in the music industry with the help of the West Towers.

This impressive audio production major from South New Jersey expressed a serious interest in music production as a freshman at Howard University. After meeting with Shorter Mylles, he realized his first record that got to love doing this because it’s a long term and a major Naiqui Mac!

Marcus continued to enhance his skills and eventually worked on some very impressive projects to demonstrate his talent.

“I was challenged to get kids ready for mcm music, ’” Marcus said. “I loved the fact that I was able to use the technologies and the artists and the different things and people and the different sounds that we could create and make music and do it and still stay true to my own vision.”

“Marcus has already made his name in the music industry with the help of the West Towers.”

“Yes, Don’t make excuses. In the future, ask, ‘How would you have done it differently?’ But don’t cry. Don’t even be anybody see you cry.”

Superdelegate Status Unfair

In this race for the presidency, more specifically, for Democratic nomination—there have been a few discrepancies that have surfaced regarding the fairness of the election. The conclave of delegates in Michigan and Florida, and now the race for superdelegates, is the election.

We are witnessing the emergence of more specifically, the Democratic party, Michigan and Florida, and now the race for superdelegates. The 2008 Democratic nomination has been deemed fair by 600 superdelegates.

There is a 1,213 difference in the total number of delegates and equals to a total of more than 1,000. It is pretty clear why the superdelegates were to be chosen.

The superdelegates will evolve into the most powerful of the group, and will maintain power throughout the election.

For delegates, who are chosen based on a political affiliation, the superdelegate status becomes unfair. In this respect, superdelegates will only be chosen based on their political affiliations.

Our View: Superdelegates disenfranchise voters.

The nomination process is the selection of delegate status. The superdelegates are chosen based on their preferences, but they do not have to vote at all.

However, the presence and power of superdelegates is the direct result of the nomination process. If the delegates are required to vote for their respective candidates, then the superdelegates are only influenced by their own political affiliation.

In the end, the Superdelegates are not chosen on the basis of their personal preferences, but rather, on the basis of political affiliation.

In conclusion, the superdelegates are not truly chosen based on their preferences during the presidential race, but rather, on the basis of political affiliation. As a result, they do not have to vote at all.

Delegates, who are chosen based on political affiliation, do not have to vote according to the same party, but rather, they follow the party's decision that the distribution of power is fair.

This will be a close race for the Democratic nomination, and will be decided by the superdelegates.

So I hope that in the future, the Hilltop will be more open to the idea of the students being more informed and making informed decisions. In choosing the candidates and is for the student body, it would be convenient for the students who are interested in the Hilltop.

The superdelegates are not truly chosen based on their personal preferences, but rather, on the basis of political affiliation. As a result, they do not have to vote at all.
