President Bush addressed the Republican National Convention last night as the nation watched his every word. Bush is scheduled to speak Monday, the opening night of the convention. The Kwame Ture Society, a student group that is the best choice to lead and shape the future of the country, was founded in 1969. Kwame Ture and his associates were leaders in the struggle for African and Puerto Rican liberation.

Bush and the Republican ticket have been criticized for their handling of the war in Iraq and the economic problems at home. Despite these criticisms, Bush remains popular with many Americans, especially in the Midwest and the South.

According to the latest polls, Bush is leading in numerous states and is likely to win re-election. However, his campaign has faced challenges in recent months, including the Iraq war and economic troubles.

Bush is expected to address these issues in his speech, but he will also focus on the importance of family values and the need for unity in America.

Bush is expected to speak for about an hour and a half, and his speech is expected to be one of the highlights of the convention.

The convention is expected to last through Thursday, and the Republican ticket is expected to receive a strong endorsement from the delegates.

CAMPUS EDITOR

Third was biology professor in the College of Medicine. Gary Gordon was a senior in high school when Hurricane Katina devastated New Orleans. Gordson will vividly remember the event, and the impact it had on his life. When the storm hit, his family relocated to Houston to escape the imminent school shutdown.

After Katrina hit, Gordon’s family was not able to return to their New Orleans East home until the fall of 2009. They spent months working to rebuild and, according to Gordon, “the hardest part for me was being separated from my family.”

The Hilltop: Could you please tell me where you were when Katrina devastated New Orleans?

Gary Gordon: During the time of the storm, I was in New Orleans East. We resided for the most part in the Mustang Family Inn, in a hotel in Houston while Katrina was devastating New Orleans.

The Hilltop: Could you describe your emotions at the time of Katrina?

Gary Gordon: It was a scary time for me and my family because it was apparent that everything wasn’t safe. We were not sure if the storm would be the same as before, I didn’t know when and if I would be going home to New Orleans. I didn’t know if I would return from school again. It was hard for us to continue with our plans.

The Hilltop: How would you describe the nation’s reaction to Katrina? How would you describe federal re­sponse?

Gary Gordon: During the event of the storm, the federal response was not as helpful as one would like. For instance, Hurricane Katrina did not receive the same amount of federal assistance as Hurricane Ginnie because the former was an inland storm.

Blackburn Adult Education Center

Student may find that the hall of the Blackburn Adult Education Center is difficult to view. But, beyond the look, it has been a home away from home for students returning to school. And it has been hard continuing family members who were not able to return.

The Hilltop: What do you think is the general feeling of residents of New Orleans?

Gary Gordon: It is a very hard time for many families because of the loss of everything. It is tough to think of where the family will be for the next few years. It is tough for my family to be so close to the affects of Hurricane Katrina.

The Hilltop: What brought you to Ihnen? Gordon: I have been at Hayden senior high school since the beginning of school. But, beyond the look, it has been a home away from home for students returning to school. And it has been hard continuing family members who were not able to return.

The Hilltop: Have you ever gone back to volunteers with the Katrina relief?

Gary Gordon: Yes, I have been back to Volunteers. My family has been in a situation where we have had to work hard to get things done. We have also had to work hard to get things done.

The Hilltop: If you had not returned from Katrina for the past years, what do you think would have happened to your life?

Gary Gordon: I might have not returned to school for the past years. But, beyond the look, it has been a home away from home for students returning to school. And it has been hard continuing family members who were not able to return.

Black Airmen Help Underprivileged Youth Soar, Achieve Piloting Dreams

By EMILY HOLLAND

It has been a long haul for Marquise Green, but he's not alone. The young man from Highway 36, Texas, is one of the first African American pilots to be trained by the Black Pilots of America Organization (BPAO). Today, he is one of the 327,000 blacks who have learned to fly.

For the millions living here illegally, immigration law has remained a hot topic as the population of illegal aliens has increased. Despite the tried and failed efforts of the public to force the United States to reform its immigration system, there are approximately 572,000 ICE fugitives in the United States who have not been apprehended by the authorities.

The Illinois Coalition for Immigrant Rights Executive Director, in a press release, said on September 3, 2008, “This is a publicity stunt by ICE to drum up support for the upcoming midterm elections. Despite the tried and failed efforts of the public to force the United States to reform its immigration system, there are approximately 572,000 ICE fugitives in the United States who have not been apprehended by the authorities.”

Safe Haven Law Reaches Nebraska, Allows Abandonment

BY ANGELA P. SMITH
Staff Writer

Nebraska recently enacted a Safe Haven law, allowing parents to surrender their unneeded newborns to local law enforcement agencies.

Though Nebraska is the last state to adopt the "Safe Haven" law, it is also the first state to pass a law that allows for the surrender of newborns up to the age of 30 days. This law has been in effect since August 29th.

Passed in Nebraska by state's nonpartisan legislature, this law says that no parent can be prosecuted for turning over their newborn to any police or sheriff's department, hospital or child care agency.

State Sen. Pete Pirsch (R-Neb.), who wrote the bill's amendment that modifies statutes to allow for abandoned children, said, "It is 2494, a decade-old law that was abandoned in favor of the Illinois Safe Haven law in 1999.

"Illinois and Nebraska have previously had laws that allow parents to voluntarily give up newborns between a trash can and a discarded box," Pirsch said in an interview with Newsweek.

"Those parents come to a point where they have frustration and anger that may injure the child," Pirsch continued. "This is a vastly superior system set up to take the child from a position of danger and put them in a safe environment."

But many critics call the new law troublesome, saying that it may deter parents from seeking help through formal adoption processes.

"If you're going to do this thing, make sure you love her to death, make sure you love her to death," Zebra Harrell said, "People tend to have a list of traits they want in a mate, like tall. Sometimes you can't have a good relationship with a short man."

"Parents often choose the myth that all black men date outside their race saying that the percentage was 50. Even in 2006, the overall rate of child fatalities was 2.04 deaths per 100,000 children, and 80 percent of the child fatalities were attributed to neglect.

"In 2004, a two-day-old infant was abandoned in a sewer near the Elkhorn River in Norfolk, Nebraska, and in 2005, a woman found baby born abandoned in a trash can between a trash can and a discarded TV."

"These parents come to a point where they have frustration and anger that may injure the child."

But Pirsch added, "The Illinois Safe Haven law set the parameters of the law and we need to make sure that those parameters are followed."

"Passed in February by the state's nonpartisan legislature, the law says that no parent can be prosecuted for turning over their newborn to any police or sheriff's department, hospital or child care agency."

SPORTS NASA's Diversity Internship Program

BY JAMELA JOSEPH

When Howard University's Sophia DaSilva and Janice McClarren were in college, they were browsing for internships. Both were looking for opportunities in the sports industry. So, when they discovered NASA's Diversity Internship Program, they knew it could meet their needs.

With this program, students are placed in various departments of NASCAR, a motorsport company, to gain hands-on experience. For the group of 11 students who participated in NASCAR's Diversity Internship Program in 2008, the experience was invaluable.

"The experiences were helpful," DaSilva said. "They gave us a chance to see different aspects of NASCAR, from marketing to legal work and beyond."

By the end of the program, DaSilva and McClarren both expressed their gratitude for the internship.

"It was a great opportunity to learn about the sport," DaSilva said. "It was a unique experience that I will never forget.

"It was a great opportunity to learn about the sport," McClarren added. "It was a unique experience that I will never forget.

In addition to this positive experience, the diversity internship program helped to increase awareness and appreciation for NASCAR among the students.

Alabama Cracks Down On Obesity in Workplace

BY JENERRA ALBERT
Contributing Writer

The Alabama State Employee Board (SEIB) plan is the first of its kind in the battle against the bulge. A plan has been approved in some states to impose fines on non-smokers who do not take the necessary steps to address their weight more than for their other concerns.

The plan would begin in January 2010, requires state employees to undergo a physical to screen for cholesterol, blood pressure and weight. If any of the screenings are abnormal, employees will be given a year to improve their health through a combination of wellness programs and doctor services provided by the state or a contractor.

The plan mandates that employers make workplace policies that are fair to those who are obese and promote weight loss as a way to improve the health of the state’s workforce.

According to the SEIB’s plan, if employees do not improve their health, they will be fined on overweight state employees. Make Alabama the first state to impose a state-wide law to encourage weight loss.

Respecting Privacy a Major Issue in Relationships

By JEREMY ALBERT
Staff Writer

Living in an electronic age, each thing is possible. Knowing who your friends are can be a difficult task in a world of computerized relationships. But for others this may be approaching the barrier of trust.

Many students recognize the need for privacy and space in relationships, despite the intimate bond that comes with love and their significant other.

According to Trust For America’s Health, a national organization focused on disease prevention, two-thirds of American are either obese or overweight and spending in fast food restaurants has increased 18 times in the past 30 years. A recent study by Epocrates, an organization that provides tools for health care professionals, found that 29 percent of physicians blame fast food industry for obesity epidemic. Why is that? The majority of the blame, 51 percent, was attributed to individuals' dietary and exercise habits.

Whether or not fast food services are truly to blame, several major food chains have started their own initiatives to help consumers lose weight.

Dunkin’ Donuts, Starbucks and Taco Bell are a few restaurants that have added a new menu to provide healthier dietary options. Unlike the original menu, the ‘new food items aim to provide nutrition with fewer calories and enhanced flavor.

Amethyst Initiative Proposes New National Drinking Age

In July 2008, presidents of universities and colleges across the nation launched the Amethyst Initiative, a project intended to lower the drinking age from 21 to 18. The National Minimum Drinking Age Act, which was passed in 1984, increased the drinking age from 18 to 21.

However, college presidents are convinced that the legal drinking age is not equitable and that it promotes binge drinking, especially amongst under-age college students. They feel that adults, who are under age 21, are able to arrive, smoke, sign contracts and go to war, hence they should also be free to choose whether or not they wish to legally consume alcohol.

College involved in the initiative include Clark University, Spelman College and the University of Maryland-College Park. Lowering the drinking age is a controversial topic because at any time last year, one in five students admitted to using alcohol, our accidents and careless mistakes involving alcohol consumption. Many people who are killed in accidents regarding drunk driving are not at fault and happen to be at the wrong place at the wrong time.

Those who intend to drink will drink and those who choose to always will always. However, there are many physiological dynamics involved when people choose to drink alcohol.

Our View: Maturity is relative and no one will be able to know if the initiative is effective until the law is passed.

Maturity is a relative and personal change that occurs at different ages in everyone’s life. It is not a variable that can be measured or predicted. To move from one step, from low to high standards, one must pass the test of time. If you choose to drink, then drink responsibly, regardless of whether or not this proposed law is passed.

The initiative will work to get the drinking age lowered to 18. It is estimated that the drinking age is up to you as an individual to the maturity levels of the authors.

The drinking age from 21 to 18 will drink and those who choose to always will always. The initiative will work to get the drinking age lowered to 18. It is estimated that the drinking age is up to you as an individual to take the necessary steps. No law for everyone, must pass it.
