GODSC, PROVOST HOST "WHAT A HOWARD MAN!"

By JESSICA LEWIS

The Howard man is the person that ties to the eyes of the majority of the university's promotion. It is considered a moral and social obligation by the students, faculty, and staff to be a Howard man. A Howard man is a person who has the characteristics of the university that make him a Howard man. He is someone who is involved in the community, someone who is a leader, and someone who is ready to take on any challenge that comes his way. The Howard man is not just a name, but a lifestyle. He is someone who is always ready to give back to the community, someone who is always ready to help others, and someone who is always ready to learn.

Donates Books to Zanzibar

The university's goal is to ensure that every student has access to the books they need to succeed. In order to do this, the university has partnered with organizations and libraries to provide students with the resources they need. The university has also established a library system that is accessible to all students, regardless of their background or location. This system allows students to access materials online, which makes it easier for them to complete their coursework. The university is committed to ensuring that every student has the opportunity to succeed, and we are taking steps to make this a reality.

Students Plan Trip to Virginia to Register Voters

By LEWIS DAVIS

The students have been working with the Virginia Department of Elections and the Virginia League of Women Voters to plan the trip. They have been meeting with local officials to discuss the logistics of the trip, and they have been working to ensure that all students have the opportunity to register to vote. The trip will take place on October 25th and 26th, and the students will be joined by a group of volunteers from the local community. The students are excited to be able to take part in this important work, and they are looking forward to making a difference in their community.

Drivers Deal with Car Theft, Tickets

BY JESSICA LEWIN

Before setting out for work, Molly Greer, a senior, was invasive by the theft of her Honda Civic. "I thought that it was just a stroke of luck that it happened," she said.

On her way to class, she realized that her car was missing. She immediately went to the police station to file a report.

Molly's car was stolen from the student parking lot at her university. As a result, she is now facing financial burden and difficulty in getting to class.

As a student driver, Molly is aware of the risks associated with parking on campus. She advises other students to be cautious and attentive when leaving their cars.

While Molly's case is unique, it highlights the importance of being vigilant and proactive in ensuring the safety of one's vehicle.

New Students Shocked to Discover School an HBCU

BOSTON UNIVERSITY

According to a study by the Boston University's School of Education, more than 60 percent of students in their freshman year plan to change their major.

The results are based on a survey conducted by the university in collaboration with the National Center for Education from 2013 to 2017.

The study found that students who plan to change their major are more likely to graduate within four years.

The survey also revealed that students who change their major are more likely to have higher GPAs.

The findings suggest that students who are undecided about their major should consider switching to a major that aligns with their interests and career goals.

IU North Carolina Central University

North Carolina Central University accuses students Martine Suggs and Bernard School for adjusting to school. Before attending, they were unaware that NCCU was an HBCU.

Suggs said that she was shocked when she was admitted to the university.

As an English major, Suggs loves writing and reading, but she said she was not prepared for the rigor of the classes.

School said that he was not aware of the university's status as an HBCU.

"I was not aware that the university was an HBCU," School said. "I thought it was just a regular university like any other."}

INDIANA UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA

According to a report by the Associated Press, Indiana University's men's basketball team has announced that it will not participate in the NCAA tournament.

The decision was made due to the university's athletic budget constraints.

The Indiana University men's basketball team has struggled in recent years, and the university has been forced to cut costs in order to remain financially viable.

The team's decision not to participate in the NCAA tournament is a reflection of the challenges that universities face in maintaining competitive athletic programs.

Popular Web site founder Craig Newmark Speaks on his successful ‘list’ and its lasting simplicity

By TRANAE FARMER-BOSTON
Contributing Writer

Million of people click through Craig Newmark’s website, but it’s a mystery men who Craig Newmark, 59, is the founder of Craigslist, the popular online classifieds site. Craigslist was founded in 1995 with a budget of $100,000 and has since become a major player in the digital advertising industry.

Newmark said he had no idea what the site would be like when he started it.

"I started making something useful, something that I needed," Newmark said. "I have a background in computer science, but I didn't have any experience in running a business. I just wanted something that would help people find information.

But now, the site has evolved into a major player in the digital world, with over 700 million visits per month.

"We're doing more than just providing information," Newmark said. "We're helping people connect with each other, and that's what I wanted to do from the beginning.

With the Craigslist's rapid and growing success, many would expect Newmark to be a millionaire by now. But he has been careful to stay true to his principles and not be swayed by the allure of the corporate culture.

"I don't want to be a millionaire," Newmark said. "I want to be able to help people connect with each other.

"It's not about making money, it's about making a difference," Newmark said. "I just want to help people find what they need, and that's why I started Craigslist.

Green Today, Gone Tomorrow: District Attempts to Go Eco-Friendly

BY MELISSA MONTGOMERY

In a city where most people use the car to get to work, and where the environment is often neglected, a plan is being developed that many are hoping to see come to fruition. This plan is called the "Green Today, Gone Tomorrow," and it aims to make the District more eco-friendly.

The plan is currently in the planning stages, and it has been met with mixed reactions. Some believe it will be a disaster, while others see it as a step in the right direction.

One of the main goals of the plan is to reduce the amount of waste produced in the District. This will be achieved through the implementation of a recycling program and the use of more eco-friendly products.

Another goal is to reduce the amount of energy used. This will be done by making buildings more energy-efficient and by encouraging the use of renewable energy sources.

The plan was developed by the Metropolitan Area Planning Organization (MAP), which is responsible for the overall planning and development of the District. The organization has been working on the plan for several years, and it is expected to be completed in the near future.

The "Green Today, Gone Tomorrow" plan is designed to make the District a more environmentally friendly place to live and work. It is hoped that the plan will be successful and that it will serve as an example for other cities to follow.

African-American Landmarks Presents: Ben's Chili Bowl

By Richard S. Hein

In the heart of the District, there is a landmark that has stood the test of time. Ben's Chili Bowl, located in the Shaw neighborhood, has been serving up delicious food for decades.

The restaurant, named after its owner, Benjamin "Ben" Branch, opened in 1958 and has since become a beloved institution. Ben's Chili Bowl is known for its chili con carne, hamburgers, and hot dogs, all of which are served with a side of love.

The restaurant has a loyal following, with many customers coming back year after year. Ben's Chili Bowl is not just a restaurant; it is a part of the fabric of the community.

Kwame Kilpatrick's Sentence to Affect More Than His Love Affair

Last week, a jury delivered a sentence to former Detroit Mayor Kwame Kilpatrick and his ex-girlfriend, Christine Beatty. The two were found guilty of public corruption. Kilpatrick was sentenced to 28 years in prison for his role in a pay-to-play scheme that involved the awarding of city contracts. Beatty was convicted on a single charge of soliciting bribes and received three years in prison. The sentences were a significant blow to the city's efforts to address widespread corruption and rebuilding its reputation.

Our View: The city's current situation is unfortunate and hopefully the interim mayor will be able to effectively lead the city until the general elections in 2009.

The media thrive off of a city that is as famous for its political corruption as it is for its music. In recent years, the city has been embroiled in numerous corruption scandals, including the shocked of at least nine city council members. Kilpatrick and Beatty's convictions highlight the need for ethical leadership and accountability in government. It is crucial that the interim mayor, Duggan, is able to address the city's challenges and move it forward.

Howard Alumna Aims to Expel Disparities in Minority Health

BY BRITTANY JONSON

In August, Howard University Alumni Association President Elect Kiwanza McCool is looking to revitalize her alma mater. A registered dietitian, McCool has been in the food industry for nearly 14 years, and has focused on addressing the food insecurity issue within underserved communities.

The goal of the initiative, which was founded by Howard’s food management provider, Sodexo, and Terral Health Care for the Food System, is to improve health outcomes by helping to address the food insecurity issue within underserved communities.

According to the Institute of Medicine’s 2010 report, “Nutritional Status and Food Security,” food insecurity is a major public health issue in the United States, with more than 1 in 7 children having experienced food insecurity in the past year.

In 2006, the report, “Food, Health, and Society: Challenges for the 21st Century,” highlighted the need for a comprehensive national strategy to address food insecurity and improve health outcomes for vulnerable populations.

“Terral Health Care is dedicated to providing nutritious and balanced meals to our clients,” McCool said. “Our goal is to ensure that everyone has access to healthy, nutritious food, regardless of their socioeconomic status.”

Proper Food Storage Plays Big Part in Health

BY CHRIS CARAVAJ

Broken-down bones, rectal tears, numbness and loss of balance. When you consider the changes that are occurring in people’s bodies as they age, it’s no wonder that the quality of food storage is so important.

In the past, people stored their food in a variety of ways, but they didn’t always think about the impact it had on the quality of the food. Now, with the advent of modern refrigeration, people are storing their food in a more controlled environment, which helps to maintain the quality of the food.

But even with modern refrigeration, people must still be careful about how they store their food. For example, meats should be stored at a temperature of 0 degrees Fahrenheit, while fruits and vegetables should be stored at a temperature of 40 degrees Fahrenheit.

It’s important to remember that improper food storage can lead to foodborne illnesses. Improper food storage can cause bacteria to grow, which can lead to foodborne illnesses.

In an attempt to combat these illnesses, many people are now storing their food in airtight containers. But even with these containers, people must still be careful about how they store their food. For example, meats should be stored in the refrigerator, while fruits and vegetables should be stored in the freezer.

Ultimately, while food storage may seem like a simple task, it’s important to remember that the quality of the food depends on how it is stored. By being mindful of how you store your food, you can help to ensure that you and your family are eating healthy, nutritious food.
