AllHipHop Separates
"Fact from Fiction"

BY JERISHA ALBERT

The White House has announced that AllHipHop would be removed from a government-sponsored program.

"The government has made it clear that AllHipHop is no longer eligible to participate in the program," said Jerisha Albert, a spokesperson for the White House.

Albert explained that the decision was made after a review of the website's content revealed a number of issues.

"We found that AllHipHop had not been adhering to the program's guidelines," said Albert. "We believe they are not in line with the values and objectives of the program."

"They are important because they are responsible for the future of the students, and they help bridge the gap between the university and the students," said Gannon and Sandy Johnson, a faculty member at Buffalo State.

Their role, however, is not well understood by the students who they should be in a major decision.

The students get to vote on the initiative, but they don't know if the initiative is even voted on in the student senate.

"They are not what the students are voting on," said Johnson. "They are voting on the initiatives made by the student senate, not the initiatives made by the students themselves."

Facebook Helps Find Old Friends

BY JESSICA MAGDALES

Chicago Tribune (MCN)

It was the first message Mark Wakeman had ever written to a stranger. And it was a small one: "Did you go to Saddle Brook High School?"

She did, in fact, and that's how

They first met online in 1993, a year before Wakeman graduated and the year she met her husband, Mark. They've been married 15 years. They had a son together.

"I never forgot her name," Jack.

"We met at a timel when our lives grew apart," said Glenda Brown, who worked for the same bank as Mark for 15 years. "We didn't talk much."

"It wasn't until earlier this year, when Mark and I moved to a new house in Wayne," Glenda said. "We started talking about old friends, and she mentioned me."

"I didn't realize how much time had passed," Jack.

"We decided to meet for brunch," Glenda said. "It was a happy surprise."

"I never thought we'd find her again," Jack.

"It's amazing to see how much we have in common," Glenda said. "We both love the same TV shows and books."

"We're looking forward to our next meeting," Glenda said. "We already have plans to go to a concert together."
Shelter Closing Leaves D.C.’s Homeless Out in the Cold

Psychologists Question Multiasking

Juggling several activities at once may lessen critical brain functions

By TERRA J. JOHNSON

"Multiasking, or doing several tasks simultaneously, can actually improve your brain's ability to handle information," said psychologist Dr. John Kihlstrom. "However, it can also decrease your ability to concentrate on a single task.

Dr. Kihlstrom explained that when you multiask, your brain is forced to switch between tasks, which can lead to a decrease in the quality of your work. He added that multiasking can also lead to a decrease in your ability to remember information.

Dr. Kihlstrom recommended that people limit their multiasking to activities that are not critical, such as listening to music while doing homework. He also suggested that people take regular breaks to rest their brains.

Dr. Kihlstrom's research has implications for a wide range of fields, including education, business, and engineering. He said that understanding the effects of multiasking can help people make better decisions about how to allocate their time and energy.

Dr. Kihlstrom's findings have been published in several scientific journals and have been cited in numerous articles and reports.

Dr. Kihlstrom's work has been widely recognized and he has received numerous awards for his contributions to the field of psychology.

Dr. Kihlstrom is a member of the American Psychological Association and the Society for Experimental Psychology.

Dr. Kihlstrom is the author of several books on the topic of cognitive neuroscience.

Dr. Kihlstrom is currently the director of the Cognitive Neuroscience Laboratory at the University of California, San Diego.
The Hilltop Launches New Web Site, Enhances Multimedia, Web Content

The world of information technology is ever-changing, and the way that people across the area have rapidly evolved. Today, we launched a new version of the online paper and recognize both the local and global community to take advantage of the upgraded Hilltop.

Although the Web site's address will remain the same, users who wish to participate in the site will have to sign up in order to submit or access the site.

A boost for users: The traditional design of print newspapers is one that cannot be used online. As the Hilltop continues to follow suit, College publisher, the software used to manufacture the site, is now a new operation onto College Publisher's.

The upgrade allows the Web site to receive more unique users, receive more national and international attention. This new site will feature multimedia, photo slide shows and updated polls. In addition, breaking news stories will be sent to the e-mail of registered users. The new Hilltop site includes articles of your choice in a reader to view on stories and submit "Letters to the Editor." As stated in the mission, the objective of The Hilltop is to deliver the daily student voice of Howard University. Whether or not we decide to interact as a writer, it would be advantageous to go online and provide feedback.

In its opening Convocation speech, President Byrd stated that he would work on improving the student's service, for the university's goals. This, he said, is the student-oriented organization that seeks to accomplish and effectively report the news to not only Howard students but to the global community.

In addition to an earlier upgrade, The Hilltop is looking to convey with Spotlight Network (www.spotlightnetwork.com).

Our View:

Readers should take advantage of the online upgrade and provide feedback.
