Chief James Discusses End Result to HUPD Changes

BY ERIK WASH

John Ia. James of the Harvard University Police Department, in an effort to reduce tensions between the department and the students, said he plans to downsize and reduce the number of Harvard cops on campus.

His words prompted a question from Harvard student John Wash, who believes that the cuts would make the campus safer.

Valls: We have no way of knowing whether the end result of such changes made to the department will lead to a safer campus. We must continue to support the police department in their efforts to improve the safety and security of students on campus.

James: The real goal of such changes being made within the department is to improve the department, while still maintaining the same level of security that students expect.

Valls: Is there a way to ensure that the changes being made do not affect the quality of service provided to the students?

James: The changes being made will not affect the quality of service provided to the students. We will continue to ensure that the needs of the students are met.

Valls: Can you explain what the impact of these changes will be on the students?

James: The changes being made will improve the quality of service provided to the students, while also reducing the cost of the department.

Valls: How will the Harvard University Police Department ensure that the changes being made will not affect the safety of students on campus?

James: We will continue to monitor the impact of these changes and ensure that the safety of students is not compromised.

Thousand Sign Wall to Honor Obama

Valls: This is a powerful message that shows how the students of Harvard are united in their support for President Obama.

James: The wall is a symbol of the students' love and support for President Obama.

Valls: How many students have signed the wall so far?

James: Over 1,000 students have signed the wall so far.

Parsons Addresses Causes, Solutions of Financial Crisis

"The modern economy cannot function without credit," Parson said. He said banks began lending about a trillion-and-a-half dollars. He said equity and people who need cash or equity and people who need cash or have not had the resources to pay back. Parsons added that the interest rates were so high that many people who were struggling for minorities and small-business owners. Parsons noted that the financial crisis was the collapse of America's housing market, but at the end of it all, he said that hope for so much is that this pseudo-recession.

"I lost of the financial growth in the government had not been created," Parson said. He said when people look at their jobs and what is happening in the stock market, they stop buying things. Denise Horn, a senior broadcast journalism major, questioned what will happen in a recession and America has not quite run," Parsons said. "He might be able to walk in water, but he can't run this economy around in circles." According to Parsons, for a long-term outlook, the housing market must be stabilized and the banks must receive lending.

"Leaving is what is going to get the economy going again so that home­owners can get more and more and more and more can be created," Parson said.

Food Stamp Usage Increases Around U.S.

BY TAMARA WELLS

The number of Americans using food stamps has increased by more than 60 percent in the past five years, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture. With the rising cost of food and the increasing number of Americans living below the poverty line, the number of food stamp recipients has also increased. In 2008, the federal government estimated that 14.3% of the population used food stamps, up from 9.6% in 2003.

The increase in food stamp usage is a result of the economic downturn that the United States has been experiencing. Many Americans are struggling to make ends meet, and food stamps have become an important source of assistance. The program provides cash benefits to low-income individuals and families, allowing them to purchase food.

However, the increase in food stamp usage has raised concerns about the sustainability of the program. Some argue that the program is too generous and that it encourages a culture of dependence. Others argue that the program is necessary to help those in need.

Governor Schwarzenegger Faces Charges for Contempt

By COURTNEY WINS

California Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger faces impeachment proceedings in the California Senate over a real estate development deal.

According to a report in The Los Angeles Times, Schwarzenegger and his wife, Maria Shriver, were paid $100,000 by a then-advisor to the governor to arrange the sale of a property in Malibu. The report claims that Schwarzenegger did not disclose this financial interest in the transaction.

The California Senate Ethics Committee has launched an investigation into the matter. The Senate voted 16-0 to open an impeachment inquiry against Schwarzenegger. If convicted, he could be removed from office.

 Schwarzenegger has denied any wrongdoing and has said that he was unaware of the financial arrangement.

The organization has received international support and has been able to maintain its mandate worldwide.

In conclusion, the UN Peacekeepers have been successful in maintaining peace and stability in the region, and their work is expected to continue in the coming years.
Freshman Receiver Brandon Drayton Hopes to Learn From a Season of Struggle, Improve for Next Season

BY NATASHA BETHA

 NaNosports

As a true freshman at Northwestern, Brandon Drayton was a part of a team that struggled on the field. The University of Maryland, where the freshman football player is currently a sophomore, was not a factor in his decision to attend Northwestern. Drayton chose Northwestern because of its strong academic program and its successful football team.

In high school, Drayton was a three-sport athlete and a standout basketball player. He was recruited by several Division I football programs, but he chose to attend Northwestern because of its academic reputation and its successful football team.

Drayton's freshman season was a challenging one, as he played in only five games and had a total of 20 receptions for 278 yards. Despite the limited playing time, Drayton showed potential and, according to his coaches, he is improving each week.

Drayton's father, who played football at the University of Missouri, is a strong influence in his life. He encourages Drayton to work hard and stay focused on his goals.

Drayton's main goal is to become a more consistent receiver and to improve his route-running abilities. He also wants to learn from his mistakes and work on his mental game.

Drayton is looking forward to the opportunity to contribute to Northwestern's offense in his second year. He is excited about the upcoming season and is determined to make the most of his time on the field.

The freshman receiver is grateful for the support of his family and friends, and he is determined to make them proud.

Possibility of HIV/AIDS Cure Misinterpreted by Headlines

When the world was introduced to HIV/AIDS in the early 1980s, the global population was up in arms and found it hard to grasp that a deadly virus could be transmitted through blood, semen, unpro- tected sexual fluid and breast milk.

For years, the idea of combating the disease was associated with the always prone to overreaction among their medical professionals. The vaccine was still in the early stages, and the virus was not yet fully understood.

Although the idea of a cure has gotten to the medical world, a cure has yet to be found. However, last week, a newspaper headlined a report that suggested a cure for AIDS had been developed, which was unexpected and that the HIV-positive patient was cured.

The vaccine was in the early stages, and the virus was not yet fully understood. The report was incorrect, and the patient had been cured.

The vaccine was in the early stages, and the virus was not yet fully understood. The report was incorrect, and the patient had been cured.

Our View: The possibility of a cure for HIV/AIDS would completely change mankind’s way of living, but other repercussions need to be considered.

People living with HIV/AIDS need support, education, and community involvement.
