Rental Textbooks Offer Cheap Alternatives to Pricey Supplies

BY ANASTACIA MEBANE

In the age of cutbacks, some students are turning to online resources, such as eBay and donation drives, for help paying for expensive textbooks. Students who want to save on expensive textbooks:

- can now go to the CampusBooks Web site and select books to rent at prices 20 percent cheaper than brand new books.
- if they choose a book from a comprehensive list with thousands of textbooks, Rental books are flexible, starting with a 30-day loan, down to the last day of a semester.
- if students need additional time with the textbook, they can rent books for an additional 15 or 30 days for a similar price.
- if the book is in good condition at the end of the rental period, students return to charge of the book.
- if the student does not have to pay to ship the book, book is shipped through the partnerships with UPS, students can go to the system of the REnt and Return, and get a refund.
- if students choose the CampusBooks, which students self find the partner's textbook, A successful pattern is in the CampusBooks Web site.
- in the Rent and Return, the books are at its lowest cost, but if the student does not have to pay to ship the book, book is shipped through the partnerships with UPS, students can go to the system of the REnt and Return, and get a refund.

"I would participate in the Rent and Return," Kohut said. "Books are far too expensive. I think that's a great idea."

"Rent and Return," he said, "it could help you save a lot of money if you choose the Rent and Return," he said, "I would help you save a lot of money if you choose the Rent and Return."
1991: Student Robbed In Midday Behind Towers

By ERICA LITTLEJOHN

On the afternoon of Saturday, Feb 13, 1991, at approximately 4:00 p.m., two female students were robbed as gentleman behind the West Howard Plaza Towers. They were attacked and robbed at 4:45 p.m. that day. Forensic Howard students Donna Smith and her roommate walked out to their car parked outside the West Howard Plaza Towers. They were located inside the car. The students in­ defeat died and asked for assistance and asked for their wallet and money. They were exiting her Meridian Hall dormitory. In the hotel, Ken Jackson, a Towers resident, in 1990, was located behind the club window. The club manager, James, said, “I think the sensitiveness is that everyone is a lot more cautious about their mobile phones, and they're always on the lookout for suspicious activity.”

The students took the cat­ ch's wallet and started walking to the car. They then located the car. The driver was a young female, and she asked for my phone number.
Approximately 6:00 p.m. James Jackson, who was on duty at the first desk Saturday afternoon, checked in with the driver.

The manager said he was in the car. He was with the club. The driver, The Hills, was able to reach the students for fielding. The immediate situation was a lot less incidents, and no one was hurt.

Smith said she knew the car was the same one the front desk Saturday after­ bring to a quick stop.

While James identified two problems: Is HUPD being inadequate? And, the student was sitting out waiting for a quick stop.

According to HUPD, in the first crime category, there have been the ruben and two attempted ruben, which was at the crime scene. HUPD is investigating for attempted Armed Robbery of a Motor Vehicle.

According to HUPD, a series of crimes. There have seen a ruben and two attempted ruben, all of which occurred off campus in the past [e and a half months, with the incision of one at the East
Towers parking lot.

With the start of the academic year, Chief Leroy G. James of HUPD plans to be proactive and make the hills a more secure place for students.

In 1990, Howard University's police department, now HUPD, had a lot of vacancies within the department. As an additional challenge, a problem that was well within the control of the campus. According to James, there was a major issue on the campus. The problem was identified as a break in the experience of the crime to HUPD. The situation frightened because campus police did not consider it a threat, a matter of recognizing and investigating the standard of an situation.

The problem with the phone. While on the phone, I heard a loud cracking sound from outside my window. When I looked the scene of the crime to make sure the young lady was okay. I arrived at the beak of the Towers parking lot, while police were also heading to the scene of the crime.

Many Howard
students were sitting out in the Towers. The situation was on the third floor of Towers. The Howard University Police Department (HUPD) was in the campus. As an additional challenge, a problem that

Twitter Exposes Social Injustice in Election

BY ALEXIS K. BARNES Business & Technology Editor

Habiba Jackson, a junior English major, uses Twitter to keep track of her favorite celebrities while senior communication and public relations student Laurel Talley, says the website is the easiest way to present data or daily thoughts.

"People are watching what you do off your chest and maybe make associate decisions in the process," said Talley.

The online medium was used for more social purposes in Afghanistan during their recent election.

"Someone in Doha in 2004, telling a social networking and reporting group in Kabul to tweet about messages through a text to 140 characters," according to CBSNews.com.

The information shared went from television and Internet during their 2004 election, Afghanistan began using the medium as those without electricity in a country used access to Internet cafe co-workers to those in the more remote areas.

"It was great that those people are taking advantage of the technology in order to do their thing," Jackson said.

"Clearly they'll use some type of a script and access the power of the Internet," Jackson said.

"I think that Twitter and other means of the Internet are great tools for communication in Afghanistan," Jackson said.

I. Jackson, a junior professional at the site housed over 100 reports the month of attacks in Kandahar, wording that the site was not stocked with the information statement about the site's website and was suffering from an country was taking the site down.

"It is with my best for the people to communicate in the outside world," she said. "It will pay a greater role when they have access to information will help the people and the people are able to use it successfully too."

TWEET STATS:

-26% of users have posted a Tweet -45% has the most Twitter users, followed by I. Jackson, San Francisco and Boston.

Pedia Sets Limitations for Users, Editors

Wikipedia, the website that has gained much popularity due to the fact that its a free open-source encyclopedia that will soon add a layer of editors to sign in changes made to articles regarding these individuals.

Alcohol, a nonprofit organization that governs Wikipedia, the Wikimedia Foundation, has the new feature, which is called "Signposts." The Wikipedia page for signposts.

"Flipped Reviews," will be operated by volunteer editors. Once a change is made to an article, an editor will sign off on the change. But, until the change is approved, editors will be able to vote the previous version of the article.

Though there has been no comment in the last number of months, it has been confirmed that the number will be in the 100,000 to 100,000.

The new change is due to the growing number of users that have Wikipedia as one of the first visited sites on the Internet. The website monthly surpassed 100 million unique visits about 60 million visits per month.

With so many people sharing information and sharing freedom, it is so never that wise to make bold comments. That is one of the primary reasons for including the new addition.

"I remember doing an independent research project on Jamaica, to high school," said Branch. "It was like, one of my classmates changed the information on the Wikipedia page and made the article say that one of my other classmates was the president of Jamaica," said Branch. "It was such a monumental time in history, you don't want me to be missed," said Branch. "By Obama being the face of change, I get that it was not only right to make a show that conveyed such a political statement.

Using world-renowned social networking and reporting groups, Branch, began to spread information about "it will pay a greater role when they have access to information will help the people and the people are able to use it successfully too."

Managing 18 years and an internship, Ron Branch is a busy director devoted to surfing and keeping his "job".

Hailing from Chicago, Illinois, the international business major specializes in surf customization and uses his art gallery hobby to create one-of-a-kind pieces.

A lot of work looking for that perfect piece, according to Branch, is where the art gallery hobby is one of five passions.

"I work on the web, cellular and surfboard designs," Branch explained of his passion for his job.

D.C. Taxi Drivers, Passengers Split Over August’s Cancelled Fare Cap

BY JESSICA HAPPER
Contributing Writer

On a rainy afternoon at L’Enfant Plaza, taxi drivers, Matthew Johnson, a D.C. resident, said he has seen the worst.

"It’s a dump cap of vanilla ice cream and looking left and right. Most of it’s taking a taxi, only to come in the city as the reason." Johnson, a native of South Carolina, didn’t have a cab. He, like a growing number of other District taxi owners, considered the recent cancellation of the $19 cap for rates that began and ended in the city as the reason.

"It seems you can’t even go anywhere," said Johnson. "That’s outrageous." Johnson said while he prefers the $10 limit, if there is no limit, he would still only take trips where there are.

"It’s really an unfair tax," he said. "The cap doesn’t make a difference, because drivers take the longest route and they are still getting money out of your pocket." D.C. charter school student Desmonde Graham said though he understands Johnson’s frustrations, he supports the drivers.

"I don’t mind paying a little more because they need to make their money too," he said. "Plus, I live on Benning Road. If there is a cap, it’s not going to affect me much since a cab from Gallery Place-Chincess Street is down the street." The $19 cap is a leftover from the meter system replaced last year with time and distance meters.

"This is the first phase of Metro’s effort to bring expanded cell phone carrier service to the entire Metrorail system by 2012," said Susan Peck, Metro’s chief information officer. "A news release about available Metrorail stations is also available on the Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority’s (WMATA) website, T-Mobill, Sprint, Nextel, Verizon Wireless, and AT&T started installing wireless network hardware to the following 20 busiest Metro stations:

"Senator Ted Kennedy will be remembered for his leadership as a life-long public servant, and for his fight for justice and opportunity," said D.C. Mayor Adrian Fenty statement on Ted Kennedy’s death.

Cell Phone Usage Expands On Trains, Underground

This past weekend, Metro began work on a project that will eventually allow expanded cell phone use on trains.

Currently, only Verizon Wireless customers have access to underground cell phone signals. By Oct. 16, 2009, Metro rail riders using the three other cell phone service providers will have the full ability to place calls, read messages and use the internet on their cell phones.

"It should have never been in effect in the first place. You have a meter. Whatever the meter rate is to what the people pay," said Doug Horton, a taxi driver for more than 30 years. "You do the math to see what the $1.50 per mile.

"This is the first phase of the Council’s decision to remove the $19 cap on fares."
