Career Fest Hits Hard on Yard

Career Service Office offers career fair, mock interviews, free food

The official launch of the Career Service Office's annual Career Fair was on Monday, the first day of classes. The Career Service Office offers a wide range of services to students, including career counseling, resume building, and interview preparation.

The fair was held in the Blackburn Center and was open to all students. Students had the opportunity to meet with representatives from various companies and organizations, and to learn about job opportunities and career paths.

Students from across Howard University attended the fair, including those in the School of Business, School of Communication, and School of Engineering. Many students were excited about the opportunity to network and explore new possibilities.

Some of the companies represented at the fair included Amazon, Google, and Microsoft. Students were able to speak with representatives about the company culture, job opportunities, and the application process.

The Career Service Office plans to hold similar events throughout the year, providing students with opportunities to connect with employers and explore career options.

New Vice Provost Should Have an Open-Door Policy

Other members of the committee are Dr. Gregory Car, chair of the African-American studies department, Yasmin Gabrieli, coordinator for the Graduate Student Assembly for Howard University School of Law, and Bryan Smart, Howard University Student Assembly executive president.

"This position is going to play a major role at Howard University," Smart said. "Howard is moving in the right direction of making a vice president of student affairs who will report directly to the president instead of the provost."

Smart also said that the candidate chosen by the committee should have a philosophy of wanting to build student morale and ethics. "The candidate should have an open-door policy. This will show students that they are the most important aspect of Howard University."

Smart further stated that the vice president of student affairs plays a major role in the collegiate life. "We do not spend most of our time in the classroom," Smart said. According to Smart, the candidate selected should lead to the problems students have with getting repairs in their dorms in a timely manner, and the problems of turnover stop for students as the career has. According to Richland, the December deadline will be met with the selection of the new vice president of student affairs.

Microsoft CEO Sees Pay Increase as Sales Fall

BY JASON J. CLARK

In the wake of Mike Ochs' departure, analysts announced that it was extending its officers' executive severance to two years. Ochs had announced in late 1999 that he would not be back for the 2002 fiscal year.

In an interview with The Hilltop, Ochs, Microsoft's former CEO, indicated that he had not been informed of the company's financial situation before he resigned. The company announced in late 2000 that it was laying off 2,000 employees and reducing its workforce by 15 percent.

"I didn't know about the company's financial situation before I resigned," Ochs said. "But I was informed in early 2001 that the company was laying off 2,000 employees and reducing its workforce by 15 percent."

The news of Ochs' departure came as a surprise to many analysts and investors. Ochs had been with Microsoft for 17 years and was a key figure in the company's growth.

"It's a shame to see him go," said John Seethoff, a former Microsoft executive. "He was a great leader and has contributed to the company's success."
Metro Works to Curb Suicide Trend

People are taking their lives, and can't support the idea of sharing resources available to help individuals in the midst of contemplating suicide, or those who may be pondering suicide.

The second approach is training police officers to be better trained to recognize and respond to the warning signs of suicide.

I want us to work together so that we can have a lot of people that is not possible to know that they have a lot of people who has been suicide, and that's how the idea is developed.

The third approach will be even more necessary to provide people with closer contact and services.

CrisisLink provided that prevention funds be placed primarily in Metro stations, trains and buses. They want their hotline number. 1-800-273-TALK, to be seen as many places as possible. The new government is trying to avoid being the last option to end suicide in and outside of the Metro system as possible.

CIBC Annual Legislative Conference Film: Blacks Without Borders

by JENNA HARRER

As African American communities experience their share of success in the US, many are looking to their own regions to grow.

The documentary "Blacks Without Borders" was screened at the 2006 National Association Annual Legislative Conference (NACL) on Saturday, highlighting this growing vanguard.

The video presentation offers perspective from African American religious leaders, community action, scholars and black activists about the benefits of traveling in South Africa.

After the screening at the District of Columbia Convention Center, a diverse panel of Black Without Borders and leaders challenged their peers to comment on the truth of the film's thesis and ideas to the post-screening discussion, thus enabling cities to revitalize and rebuild.

During the panel discussion, the documentarian's message, Stafford Bailey, detailed the process. "A labor of love..."

My whole perception of Africa was always preserved," Bailey said. "I think that people who want to go, who have to go, that's the key. If you have to go and see, just do that."

I did see this different side, so much more meat from black people from all over the world can do business and stay.

"There is a trend of professionals, black-on-black issues were featured on CNN, a news channel that is being attacked by black leaders from the South African media, an African American leader, who is a friend to the world leadership on a business trip."

At Howard, marijuana usage is the No. 1 drug of abuse, according to a study by the Howard University School of Dentistry's Department of Oral Health Sciences. The study found that more than 1 in 3 of the Howard University student body has used marijuana in the past year, with the highest rates among male students.

Marijuana is legal under the laws of the District of Columbia, but it is still illegal under federal law. The federal government's. position on marijuana is that it is a Schedule I controlled substance, which means it has no accepted medical use and a high potential for abuse. This means that the use of marijuana is illegal under federal law, even if it is legal under state law.

The legal status of marijuana has been a topic of debate for decades, with proponents arguing that it should be legalized for medical and recreational use, and opponents arguing that it is a dangerous drug that should be kept illegal. In recent years, there has been a growing movement to decriminalize or legalize marijuana in many states, with a growing number of states and the District of Columbia legalizing marijuana for both medical and recreational use.

The Howard University School of Dentistry's Department of Oral Health Sciences is conducting research on the effects of marijuana use on oral health. The school's researchers are studying the impact of marijuana use on the oral cavity, including the effects of marijuana on the gums, teeth, and mouth. The researchers are also studying the role of marijuana in the development of oral diseases, such as oral cancer and gum disease.

The researchers are conducting a study to determine the prevalence of marijuana use among Howard University students and to assess the impact of marijuana use on oral health. The study was conducted in collaboration with the Howard University School of Medicine's Department of Preventive Medicine and Public Health.

The researchers found that more than 1 in 3 of the Howard University student body has used marijuana in the past year, with the highest rates among male students. The study also found that marijuana use is associated with a number of oral health problems, including gum disease, tooth decay, and oral cancer.

The researchers are conducting further studies to determine the long-term effects of marijuana use on oral health. The research is funded by the National Institute on Drug Abuse and the National Institute of Dental and Craniofacial Research.

The researchers are also conducting a study to determine the impact of marijuana use on oral health among Howard University faculty and staff. The study is funded by the Howard University School of Medicine's Department of Preventive Medicine and Public Health.

Gardasil's Side Effects Raise Safety Questions

Gardasil is a vaccine designed to prevent infection in young women with certain strains of the human papillomavirus (HPV), the most dangerous kind that can cause cervical cancer.

Starting about a year ago, the media was flooded with reports of Gardasil's very moving and emotional advertisements, showing women with their teenage daughters, all claiming that receiving the three-part vaccine would result in "one less woman contracting cervical cancer.

Gardasil commercials were unambiguously sensitive and reliable, but what they didn't mention was the possibility of some serious physical side effects.

Of course they described the typical "swelling, pain or redness" at the injection site, but ignored any sense of danger of getting hurt, pills, side effects and bad reactions. Fiduciaries and other fiduciaries who have been linked to the controversial vaccinations.

Last week, the government's expert reviewing committee struck down the safety of Gardasil, and specifically whether or not the potential benefits of the vaccine outweigh the potential risks.

Although many physicians agree that the vaccination is beneficial at preventing young women from contracting dangerous strains of HPV, they also agree that Gardasil doesn't prevent the contraction of HPV in every occurrence.

Many people who are infected with HPV spontaneously eliminate the virus, and it is possible that Gardasil might even be detrimental to preventing cervical cancer.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention reported earlier this year that 23 million doses of the vaccine have been administered to young women around the nation thus far, with 3.3% reporting serious side effects.

According to an article in the Journal of the American Medical Association, these side effects can range from headache, fatigue, and fever to more serious symptoms such as severe pain, infection, and even death.

The vaccine can cause the formation of immune complexes, which can lead to the development of autoimmunity, and potentially cause lifelong harm.

The vaccine can also cause anaphylaxis, a severe allergic reaction, and other serious side effects.

Moreover, Gardasil's developer, Merck & Co., has warned that the vaccine may not be effective in preventing certain types of HPV.

When you do the common things in life in an uncommon way, you will command the attention of the world.
