Wale Performs at HU for Haitian Benefit Concert

Wale, a rapper and actor, performed at Howard University for a benefit concert to support recovery efforts in Haiti. Wale was a survivor of the January 12, 2010, earthquake in Haiti and wanted to lend his voice and platform to benefit the country. He performed several of his tracks and shared personal stories about his experiences in Haiti.

Wale said, "I've been to Haiti many times, but this time felt different. It's not just about music; it's about helping. I want to be part of the solution, not just a spectator." He also expressed his gratitude for the support he received from the Howard University community, which he called "a family." Wale emphasized the importance of education and communication in the rebuilding process.

The concert was organized by Howard University's Department of Performing Arts and the Office of Alumni Relations. It featured performances by Wale, rapper Pharell Williams, and a group of student performers from Howard University. The proceeds from the concert will go towards relief efforts in Haiti.

HU Comes Together, Bringing Benefit to Haiti

"Hands on Haiti" Benefit Concert Lifts The Spirits of HU Students Through Entertainment and Raises Money for Relief

The "Hands on Haiti" Benefit Concert was put together by Howard student Victoria Fortune with the help of HUSA and the Haitian Student Association in just over a week after the earthquake changed the lives of Haitians in both Port-au-Prince and here in Washington, D.C.

Since Tuesday when the natural disaster occurred, Howard University has raised nearly $30,000 in donations to support the Haitian Relief. Local poets, students, other musical artists and rising hip-hop star Mile were among the performers that came out to support the cause.

New HU Club, Build On, Focuses on Building Education

BY LAUREN GASPARD
Staff Writer

Since the founding of Howard University, leadership and service have been core values of students, faculty and others at the Howard University community. A new organization called Howard University "buildOn" is giving students another opportunity to extend their service to the global community.

The "buildOn" program is geared toward mentoring and empowering high school students in urban communities through reading and after school programs. The program is based in various communities and neighborhoods, and grants participants the opportunity to learn new skills and build schools in third world countries across the globe.

According to buildOn.org, students have contributed more than 133,231 hours of service in the past 12 months. Since 1992, U.S. student volunteers have helped build 332 schools in rural regions of developing nations such as Haiti, Malawi and Nepal, with more than 136,000 children and adults have attended the schools. The organization has offices in Illinois, California, Connecticut, Michigan, New York, Pennsylvania, and now in D.C. at Howard University.

Howard students involved with "buildOn" will be raising money to go to Africa and build schools for students. Howard's "buildOn" president, Natasha Graves chose a chapter at the Mecca after visiting Mali in 2007 and helping build a school. Graves is a former intern of the organization.

"Once we become recognized, Howard students will be able to perform, education-based community service throughout the D.C. community [and] learn from literacy from a global perspective," Graves said. "It will be an opportunity to not only enhance the surrounding community through ongoing service projects, but learn about and improve education globally," Graves added.

All services provided by "buildOn" are designed to uplift those that are facing world issues such as poverty, lack of education, and the inability to gain opportunities to learn how to become successful.

Senators Win Places Republicans in Better Position

BY OLIVE MONTGOMERY

Staff Writer

The Grand Old Party, GOP, is making a comeback as the Democratic Senate when Republican candidates Scott Brown, who won in a special election, and Todd Akin, who won a highly contested seat over Sen. Claire McCaskill, Democrat.

The picture of Brown and Akin as a twin stock in a stock market, as it happened in the mid-1990s, was repeated with Blue State, Massachusetts and Red State, Missouri.

Brown won by a bit in the state where he lives and represents, and so it happened in Washington, D.C., as two senators from each state.

Brown has also pushed for more laws to ban immigration, and against illegal immigrants, with an emphasis on border control.

Richard Shelby, R-Ala., will remain the Senate's senior senator, and the Senate has 50 Republicans and 50 Democrats.

Brown will not only take the role of the Senate's top Republican but also become its ranking member on the Appropriations Committee.

They are expected to call the new Senate's sessions to order as early as this week.

If you were tuned in at the last election, you need not miss a beat in the elections, as the president is up for re-election, with the possibility of a Republican president.

Cook's Senate losses are rounding outside of Massachusetts and in New Hampshire, a state that is not always Republican.

If Jealousy is a两三ti-three-year-old, he has always been the favorite to be the Republican nominee, and he has the support of the Tea Party, which has been very active in promoting him.

Garland noted that although he was in the lead before the Christmas season, he suddenly stopped all public appearances until the newyear, which happened.

The election of Republican Scott Brown may change the game in Washington, D.C., according to some analysts.

Jared Gantleman, a psychologist and author, believes Brown and his campaign will be run by a team that has understood the Massachusetts electorate.

"I feel that they worked harder than Martha Coakley," he said. Gantleman noted that although she was in the lead before the Christmas season, she suddenly stopped all public appearances until the new year.

In the face of severe, America has historically known how to the electorate for making it through the next season, and has extended to Hollywood and the many celebrities who make it up.

For many years, celebrity power has been able to mobilize votes for centrist candidates, but it is not often thought about.

Brown has been in the lead before the Christmas season, and he has not just because they know that

Most recently, the 1/2 magnitude earthquake that hit Haiti, with aftershocks above 3.0 magnitudes, gave celebrities another chance to shine, this time giving money and show the world how.

At the 11th Annual Global Glimpse Awards held in Beverly Hills, California, many performances were centered in honor of the victims of the disaster, with many stars even the event in their acceptance speeches.

"It is, in concert with my heart. I am aware of everything going on around me and especially in Haiti," said Garland, who has been in the lead before the Christmas season, and he has extended to Hollywood and the many celebrities who make it up.

Obama’s Passiveness Toward Racism Confuses

In the words of Newt Gingrich, Barack Obama’s reaction to the civil rights protests taking a “Negro devil” onto the defensive is “obviously wrong.” Of course, he’s been referred to as “southern African-American” and “Magic Negro.” So Obama, the president of the country, is supposed to be the “Great White Hope.”

Our View: Obama is taking the nature by just doing the job he was elected to do.

Obama now has a rare opportunity to show leadership, and this could be his big chance to make a difference in America. As President, he’s got a unique opportunity to make a difference.

Perspective: The Interracial Perspective

Recently, there was an article that discussed the interaction between whites and blacks. The article was very interesting and handled with care. It was an attempt to understand the problems behind the interaction between whites and blacks.

First, it is important to understand the dynamics of the white-black interaction. It is a complex process that involves complex or physical clues that happen to be in the environment.

Second, the relationships between the whites and blacks are not simple. They are complex and involve different factors that separate them from each other.

By bringing this into the social context of race and going “interacial” relationships is a major concept, one only finds itself in the illusion that such a thing is not there.

The separation of the races has been a gross breakup and is a major portion of the intensely demonized minority toward President Barack Obama is based on the fact that he is a black man, but he isn’t African-American.

So with everyone paying such close attention to the issue, Obama is suffering in his role as president. It’s interesting that he seems the least concerned about it, especially when he’s the one who is placed second to the hot-heads in the media.

The explanation to his inactivity is the president is actually doing his job. His public image is pure harmony for the racially insensitive (if we believe the conservative) and understandable, to ignore him, LBJ, Reagan’s constant of facing racism.

We understand about everyone’s racism though, we help fight pain and discrimination, not helping him get back on his feet, or just having any kind of leadership whatsoever anymore.

Racists in reality believe Barack Obama is choosing to ignore, not by running his mouth into the media, but instead by proving racism wrong by doing the job he was elected to do, and doing it well.
