

*M*EMORIES and mental images grow faint as the years pass. The faces of our classmates fade away into the dim background of time. The indescribable feeling of satisfaction to be derived from renewing our acquaintanceships, if only through the medium of pictorial records, well compensates us for sacrifice made to compile such records.

It is with a desire of fulfilling this purpose that the staff of the 1934 BISON has put together this volume. May its presence serve always to keep alive in each one of us of the Class of '34 a spark of the Howard spirit ingrained in us during our undergraduate days.

We hope that this BISON will be the successful if unpretentious foundation of a financially sound school-annual program. With such a foundation it is not improbable that the University, knowing a BISON is possible, will overcome its fear of student activities and encourage such projects.
