

DEDICATION

WHATEVER of achievement there may be presented in this book, we would like to associate with the name of one whose diligent work and integrity of character have done much to extend the influence of Howard University.

Because he was an outstanding student at Cornell University, a lieutenant in line of duty with the 351st Field Artillery during the World War, the designer of five trade buildings for Tuskegee Institute, the chief draughtsman in the architectural offices of Howard J. Wiener of Bethlehem, Pa., the organizer of the department of architecture of Howard University, the architectural engineer for the first buildings for "the Howard of the Future," the originator of the twenty-year building plan, the procurer of building funds, and because he is the university architect, we dedicate the 1933 Bison to Albert I. Cassell.
